There were no anti-war cries from an angry mob, but the giant bus parked downtown made a big enough statement itself.

"It's basically a museum on wheels that speaks to the failures of the Bush administration," said Julie Blust, press secretary of The Bush Legacy Tour.

The bus stopped in Battle Creek for two hours Saturday to highlight the voting record of a local congressman whose views have aligned with Bush throughout his term.

"Tim Walberg is our focus today," said Blust, 29. "... In the midst of an election with so much personality politics, it's quite a leap to ask the American people to not associate people like McCain and Walberg with Bush."

She estimates that since it hit the road June 24, the bus has been to at least 80 cities so far. Stops in Jackson and Lansing are planned for Monday.

Nick Dentamaro | Jackson Citizen Patriot The Bush Legacy Bus made a stop in Jackson on Monday as part of its cross-country tour.

Juan Guerrero said a 10-foot-tall photo of President George W. Bush's face caused him to lose his appetite for a few minutes Monday.

"I was driving by on my way to lunch when I saw it," said Guerrero of Jackson. "I said to myself, 'Forget the lunch, I'm fed up with the Bush administration.'"

Nick Dentamaro | Jackson Citizen Patriot Rachel Baily and Joshua Britt view some of the exhibits in the Bush Legacy Bus.

The photo that stopped Guerrero was plastered on each side of the Bush Legacy Bus, a 45-foot, 28-ton museum on wheels that made stops in Jackson and Lansing on Monday as part of its cross-country campaign criticizing the president and his policies.

The bus has zigzagged its way through 60 cities and 30 states since June.

Americans United for Change, the advocacy group that rolled out the bus four months ago, plans to make it to 150 cities by the Nov. 4 election, spokeswoman Lauren Weiner said.

Before leaving Jackson, Weiner and two other members of the bus crew took pictures at W. Franklin and Second streets, the locally designated birthplace of the Republican Party.

The Rev. Ira Combs, a county Republican activist, criticized the bus campaign, calling the group “partisan zealots pushing a propaganda agenda.”

He said the group has disregarded Bush's legacy of cutting taxes for Americans and preventing domestic terrorist attacks since Sept. 11, 2001.

“That is the primary job of the president — to protect his country — and he has answered that call,” Combs said.

Americans United for Change is organized under the Internal Revenue Service as a social welfare organization, which does not allow “direct or indirect participation or intervention in political campaigns on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office.”

The group disseminated fliers and aired short films on a television screen outside the bus that linked Bush's policies to Republican presidential hopeful John McCain and incumbent U.S. Rep. Tim Walberg, R-Tipton, who is seeking re-election.

“We get people all the time who come up to us and say, 'Bush isn't running again.' We understand that,” Weiner said.

“What we're saying is, here's what happened while he was in office, and here are these people — like Tim Walberg — who voted in lockstep with it. They are running again and are looking to the future.”

Walberg spokesman Matt Lahr said that despite what his critics may say, Walberg has been an “independent voice” and he “has not been beholden to the president or to the Republican Party.”

“From opposing No Child Left Behind and amnesty for illegal immigrants to supporting unemployed Michigan workers, Congressman Walberg has stood up to President Bush when necessary and been an independent voice for the 7th District,” Walberg campaign manager Justin Roebuck said in a statement.

Group gets on the bus to blast Bush (Montgomery Advertiser)

Whether it's the ongoing war in Iraq or the current economic crisis, Americans United for Change want people to know that President Bush's legacy is one of failure.

And they believe Republican presidential nominee Sen. John McCain, and U.S. Rep. Mike Rogers, R-Saks, have been his willing accomplices in that failure.

That's the message the Washington-based organization brought to Montgomery on Tuesday in the form of a 45-foot, 28-ton museum on wheels known as the Bush Legacy Tour. The biodiesel powered tour bus, which features interactive exhibits, pulled up to the state Capitol steps for a few hours, one of the 150 stops it will make before the Nov. 4 election.

"The Bush Legacy leaves behind a disastrous misadventure in Iraq that has cost over 4,100 Americans their lives -- including 67 from right here in Alabama," said Julie Blust, spokeswoman for Americans United for Change.

"This tragic and unnecessary war in Iraq is projected to cost our nation at least $3 trillion while this administration continues to shortchange so many critical priorities here at home like education, infrastructure and health care for our children and veterans."

The legacy tour bus might seem out of place in a state that hasn't been carried by a Democratic presidential nominee since Jimmy Carter in 1976, but Alabama Democratic Party Chairman Joe Turnham said it's fitting.

Turnham said the upcoming election is really a referendum on the president, the last eight years and politicians such as Rogers who enabled Bush administration policies by voting in favor of them 94 percent of the time.

Rogers is a three-term incumbent who represents the state's congressional District 3, which covers much of east Alabama. Rogers, who is facing Montgomery lawyer Josh Segall this year, narrowly defeated Turnham in 2002 when Bob Riley, a Republican, vacated the District 3 seat to become governor.

"He beat me because George Bush came to Auburn, to Plainsman Park, and told the people there 'Mike Rogers -- this is my man. This is who I need in Washington with me,'" Turnham said. "Under Bush and Rogers, the national deficit has doubled, the third district has lost thousands of jobs and people have to drive more than 35 miles to find work."

Turnham said voters have to answer the question of whether they're better off since Bush and Rogers took office.

Zayne Smith, 28, of Montgomery, said she's heard many of the indictments against the Bush administration, but to see all of that information compiled in one place is eye-opening.

"I think it puts it in black and white," she said. "It makes me want to go and do more research and see what the two candidates believe about these things."

Shay Farley, 32, of Montgomery said the exhibit makes a person realize that a lot has transpired in the past eight years.

"It's a lot to stomach," she said. "Though this is called the Bush Legacy Tour, you can't just blame one person. These things are the result of failed leadership holistically."

Blust said that's exactly the message the tour is trying to convey even as it winds its way through the Deep South that McCain is expected to sweep. The bus will pull into Jackson, Miss., today as part of the national tour.

"These are issues that are important to everyone," Blust said.

Bush legacy tour highlights failed policies (WLOX – ABC)

GULFPORT, MS (WLOX) - A project called the "Bush Legacy Tour" wants America to reflect on the policies of George W. Bush while he's still in office.

The group called "Americans United for Change" has transformed a large bus into a rolling exhibit that's traveling the country.

Fans of George W. Bush will find nothing to like onboard the bus. With a series of clever, interactive exhibits the displays highlight what the group says are Bush failures: the Iraq war, the economy, the Katrina response and record gas prices among others.

The Bush Legacy tour offers no apologies for its assessment: Two terms of failed policies.

"While Bush is still in office, we want to cement his legacy and we look at the disasters that have happened over the last eight years," said Julie Blust with the Bush Legacy Tour.

Interactive displays deliver the message.

“Exhibits that they can find out how much they are personally paying for gas now versus when Bush took office. They can find out how much the Iraq war is costing their community,” said Blust

“He's done a lot of good, but he's also messed the economy up a lot,” said Jamie Raffeo, who checked it out during his lunch hour.

He says Americans should pay closer attention to the issues.

“Well, we have the election coming up soon and I just wanted to kind of, open mind thing.”

Teacher's union president Sue Hatem calls the exhibit a real eye opener. She has strong feelings about the president's impact on education.

“No Child Left Behind has been under funded. Teachers are leaving the field right and left due to all the pressures. Mississippi has imported teachers to teach our children from India,” Hatem said.

Despite its visible location on busy Pass Road, it seems not that many people are willing to tour an exhibit highlighting the president's failures. In the first half of its two hour visit, less than ten people boarded the bus.

Still, supporters say they're encouraged.

“Even in areas like Mississippi, we still get people to come out and look around this museum and say, ‘You know, I've lived this. I'm not better off than when Bush took office and we need some serious change,’” Blust said.

Americans United for Change is the group responsible for the Bush Legacy tour. Labor unions like the AFL-CIO and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees are among the group's financial sponsors.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) -- A nationwide bus tour sponsored by a group opposing the policies of President Bush pulled into the south parking lot of the state Capitol on Wednesday.

Only a handful of people were on hand to greet “The Bush Legacy Bus,” which featured interactive exhibits on Bush policies that Americans United for Change say have weakened the U.S. economy and security abroad.

“Unfortunately, a lot of our people have to work,” said state AFL-CIO president Jimmy C. Curry. The AFL-CIO is one of the sponsors of the tour.

Curry said he hopes the exhibits on the tour lead people to make an “informed decision” and realize what is at stake in the election and not just vote based on “30-second sound bites.”

Inhofe, who is being opposed for re-election by Democrat Andrew Rice, was criticized in materials as part of the exhibit for voting with President Bush more than 90 percent of the time and for supporting privatizing the Social Security system.

Josh Kivett, Inhofe campaign manager, said Inhofe is “an independent, conservative” voice for Oklahoma who proved with his vote against the Wall Street bailout that he does not always agree with the president.

“Sen. Inhofe has always fought for Oklahoma's interests in Washington without regard to party or politics,” Kivett said.

Wichita, Kan., is the next stop on the bus tour.

Dear Herb,

I hope you are enjoying the summer.

I just had a very productive conversation with Heather Boushey and Korin Davis at the Washington Center for Equitable Growth. We have agreed to work together on a Stated Meeting, tentatively for the Spring of 2016. As you may know, we share many members. Six of the seven members of the Center's steering committee are Fellows: Alan Blinder, Raj Chetty, Janet Currie, Emmanuel Saez, Robert Solow, Laura Tyson. Several members of the Research Advisory Board are also Fellows: David Autor, Robert Reich, Theda Skocpol, etc.

We will try to put together a program that includes several of these people and I will keep you informed of our progress.

All best,

Jonathan

Joe Biden in 2016: What Would Beau Do?

Op-Ed Columnist Maureen Dowd

August 1, 2015

WASHINGTON — A PATTERN of cutting corners, a patina of entitlement and inevitability, has led to this.

Destroying digital messages and thwarting official investigations while acting all innocent about wiping out sensitive material.

Avoiding reporters after giving disingenuous explanations at uncomfortable news conferences. Claiming egregious transgressions are a private matter and faux controversy while sending out high-power lawyers and spin doctors to deflect and minimize.

Two controlling superstars with mutable hair and militant fans, married to two magnetic superstars who can make a gazillion an hour for flashing their faces and who have been known to stir up trouble.

A pair of team captains craving a championship doing something surreptitious that they never needed to do to win.

It turns out Tom Brady and Hillary Clinton have more in common than you would think.

Brady had his assistant terminate his Samsung phone the day before he talked to an investigator about Deflategate. Hillary set up a home-brew private server, overruling the concerns of her husband's aides, and erased 30,000 emails before the government had a chance to review them to see if any were classified.

Brady and Hillary, wanting to win at all costs and believing the rules don't apply to them, are willing to take the hit of people not believing them, calculating that there is no absolute proof.

They both have a history of subterfuge — Brady and the Patriots with Spygate, Hillary with all her disappearing and appearing records.

Robert Kraft, the owner of the Patriots, is out there rabidly defending Brady. The crafty Hillary has her own rabid defender in David Brock. Kraft and Brock both have a financial interest, of course, in bleaching the images of their quarterbacks. Hillary and Brady have billion-dollar operations, and their sketchy value systems force people around them into seamy Faustian bargains.

These may be mere speed bumps for these top players. But in the case of Hillary, problems of style and substance are starting to scuff her sheen of inevitability.

There are tensions in her campaign that echo the failed 2008 campaign. Her rare interviews have seemed robotic and infused with the queenly attitude that put off people last time, before she melted in New Hampshire and decided, as in "Frozen," to Let it go. Can Hillary convey authenticity only when she thinks she's losing?

Once more, she has figuratively and literally roped off the press, sloughing off her promise at a journalistic dinner four months ago for a fresh start.

Her strategists worry about surveys showing that voters do not trust her. But her private server is a metaphor for her own lack of trust and a guarded, suspicious mind-set that lands her in needless messes.

The Wall Street Journal on Thursday offered yet another unsavory saga of what appears to be Clinton back-scratching. After Hillary, as secretary of state, intervened to help make a deal where UBS had to turn over only a small fraction of the account information sought by the I.R.S., UBS amped up its donations to the Clinton Foundation and paid Bill Clinton $1.5 million to do some Q. and A.'s for the company.

Hillary is lucky that she faces a crowded, absurdist Republican field cowering in the shadow of the megalomaniacal showman Donald Trump.

But two recent Quinnipiac University polls show her unfavorability rising in swing states. She now trails Jeb Bush by one point, after leading him by 10 in May, and Joe Biden leads Jeb by one point.

The Starbucks chairman and C.E.O. Howard Schultz at a 2012 shareholders meeting.

Elaine Thompson / Associated Press

Many Democrats fret that she seems more impatient than hungry, more cautious than charismatic. They are increasingly concerned that, aside from the very liberal Bernie Sanders, who could be approaching his ceiling in the early states, there is no backup if something blows up — no Jimmy Garoppolo to step in while Brady is suspended for four games.

Potent friends of America's lord of latte, Howard Schultz, have been pressing him to join the Democratic primary, thinking the time is right for someone who's not a political lifer. For the passionate 62-year-old — watching the circus from Seattle — it may be a tempting proposition.

After coming up from the housing projects in Brooklyn, Schultz reimagined Starbucks and then revived it. He has strong opinions, and even position papers, about what he calls the fraying American dream. While he was promoting his book on veterans last year, he honed a message about making government work again and finding “authentic, truthful leadership.”

Joe Biden is also talking to friends, family and donors about jumping in. The 72-year-old vice president has been having meetings at his Washington residence to explore the idea of taking on Hillary in Iowa and New Hampshire.

He gets along with Hillary and has always been respectful of the Democratic Party’s desire to make more history by putting the first woman in the Oval Office.

But going through the crucible of the loss of his oldest son, Beau, to brain cancer made the vice president consider the quest again.

Vice President Joseph Biden.

Jae C. Hong / Associated Press

As a little boy, Beau helped get his father through the tragedy of losing his beautiful first wife and 13-month-old daughter in the car crash that injured Beau and his brother, Hunter.

When Beau realized he was not going to make it, he asked his father if he had a minute to sit down and talk.

“Of course, honey,” the vice president replied.

At the table, Beau told his dad he was worried about him.

My kid’s dying, an anguished Joe Biden thought to himself, and he’s making sure I’m O.K.

“Dad, I know you don’t give a damn about money,” Beau told him, dismissing the idea that his father would take some sort of cushy job after the vice presidency to cash in.

Beau was losing his nouns and the right side of his face was partially paralyzed. But he had a mission: He tried to make his father promise to run, arguing that the White House should not revert to the Clintons and that the country would be better off with Biden values.

Hunter also pushed his father, telling him, “Dad, it’s who you are.”

It could be awkward for President Obama, who detoured from the usual route — supporting your vice president — and basically passed the torch to Hillary. Some in Obama’s circle do not understand why he laid out the red carpet for his former rivals. “He has no idea how much the Clintons dislike him,” said one former top White House official.

But the president has been so tender and supportive to his vice president ever since learning that Beau was sick, it’s hard to say how he will react. Since the funeral, Obama has often kept a hand on Biden’s back, as if to give him strength.

When Beau was dying, the family got rubber bracelets in blue — his favorite color — that said “WWBD,” What Would Beau Do, honoring the fact that Beau was a stickler for doing the right thing.

Joe Biden knows what Beau wants. Now he just has to decide if it's who he is.

Subject: [big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer-Another Reasons to Break Up the Big Wall Street Banks

Another Reason to Break Up Big Wall Street Banks

Ever wonder how Wall Street bankers manage to make tens – and sometimes hundreds -- of millions of dollars? How do people who really don't produce anything manage to siphon such gigantic sums from the pockets of the people who produce goods and services – who actually create the wealth?

The answer is that they have managed to gain almost monopolistic control of the keys to world financial markets, to sources of capital that are necessary to finance equity investments and bonds for everyone from the largest international corporations to new start-ups.

But, you may ask, how can this be? In the kind of competitive financial markets envisioned by Adam Smith, competition should create multiple gateways to these capital markets. What's more, price competition should prevent massive overcharges by the underwriters of big financial deals.

On Friday, August 20, Washington Post financial columnist Steven Pearlstein published an insightful article examining the reasons why there is so little price competition on underwriting deals between Wall Street's big banks.

He points out that the big investment banks would normally stand to make almost $450 million in fees on the $15 billion stock offering by General Motors. In this case, though, the Federal Government owns most of the stock. Goldman Sachs – convinced that it would never be named lead underwriter because of its legal and PR issues decided to do something that is never done on Wall Street: undercut the fee structure. It shocked its rivals by violating an unwritten law of the investment banking world – it engaged in price competition.

It turned out that Goldman's competitors Morgan Stanley and J.P. Morgan got the opportunity to underwrite the offering. But the Treasury Department insisted that they do so at Goldman's price -- .75 percent of the stock sale -- which is one quarter of the normal fee.

Now even three-quarters of a percent is a huge haul of $112 million – but it's not $450 million.

The normal fees charged by investment banks are 6 to 7 percent for deals of less than $200 million, 4 to 5 percent for middle range deals, and 3 to 4 percent for those over a billion. Pearlstein explains that the fee structure is divided into three pots:

Twenty percent is an underwriting fee for the banks' guarantee that they will buy the entire issue even if nobody else will. That was once an important consideration, but in today's markets, the investment banks ensure that no IPO goes forward unless it is pre-sold. As a result, the underwriting fee is now a pure windfall.

Sixty percent of the fee represents a sales commission, which also turns into something of a game, particularly when it involves highly desired shares of well-known companies such as GM. Since all the major relationships with all the major institutional buyers, it's hard to say which sales force actually makes the sale. So once Fidelity or TIAA decide how many shares they want to buy, they can divide the commission among the investment banks any way they choose. ...

The final 20 percent is the management fee, which goes exclusively to lead underwriters. This is for helping to prepare the prospectus, organizing the 10-day road show to market the issue to prospective buyers, keeping the order book and advising the company on the offering's price and size. For a big deal such as the GM offering, it might involve incredibly intense work by as many as 30 professionals for as long as four months – let's say generously, 30,000 hours of work. On a $15 billion IPO, that works out to $3 million per banker, or $3,000 per hour worked.

Not bad pay. These “masters of the universe” make more money in six hours than a minimum wage worker makes all year.

But the question is, how can they demand such massive fees? Do they have special skills that are so rarefied and valuable that they can demand such numbers? Are they the intellectual equivalent of precious stones?

Of course not. They do it the old fashion way. They have cornered the market. Pearlstein notes, “A handful of established firms control access to global financial markets and use this power to extract monopoly-like profits and funnel them to their executives and employees.”

These firms don’t engage in price competition because they have a “gentlemen’s agreement” between them not to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. If one of them starts undercutting the other they will drive down these fees and all of them will see less money.

The big Wall Street banks can limit the size of the investment banking club because it is very difficult for upstart firms to establish themselves. Part of the issue is size. And these firms have managed to convince potential clients that if they go around Wall Street’s gatekeepers – say, selling IPO’s at auction as Google successfully managed to do with its IPO – they will not get full price for their offerings.

In addition, with the end of the Glass-Steagall Act that once put a firewall between commercial and investment banking, companies worry that if they cut the investment banks out of the deal, they will be charged higher prices for their loans. Bundling of services is a classic means of fending off market entry from lower-priced competitors.

Pearlstein argues that one way to break through this semi-monopoly pricing structure is for companies themselves to do what the Treasury did – demand lower prices from their underwriters. But they haven’t done it up to now, and there is no reason to expect they will take that risk any time soon.

Why you might ask should anyone care if a big corporation pays a huge fee to investment bankers? Because the money they pay really represents the control of a huge quantity of the society’s goods and services. For the corporations in question it becomes a cost of doing business that is passed along to the average consumer. And, of course, these fees represent dollars that the corporations might pay to their employees who are paid maybe $25 per hour, instead of $3,000 per hour that goes to the Wall Street bankers. Remember each “Wall Street Banker hour” (at $3,000) represents 120 hours of an employee who makes $50,000 per year.

In either case these are dollars siphoned out of the hands of everyday Americans who work for living producing the goods and services of the economy – and concentrated into the pockets of a tiny elite on Wall Street. And mostly they are not paid for adding value to a product or service. They are paid a toll for having gained semi-monopoly control of the gateway to financial markets. They are the sophisticated version of a bunch of bandits who stop you on the road and demand to be paid before you can pass.

The only way to end this oligopoly of corporate finance is government action. It is just one more compelling reason why the big Wall Street banks should be broken up and we should reimpose a strict firewall between commercial and investment banking.

The new Wall Street Reform bill went a great distance to rein in the power of the big Wall Street Banks. Now Congress must take the next step.

The government must to set up new rules to assure that corporate finance is a competitive marketplace. It clearly isn’t today, and will never be so as long as a few gigantic players are allowed to maintain “gentlemen’s agreements” not to compete on the basis of price. Congress needs to act to break these institutions up, and the Anti-trust division of the Justice Department should take action to enforce the anti-trust laws.

And isn’t the only reason to break up the big Wall Street banks. There is no real competition in the credit card sector either. The top three issuers control 52.82% of the market (JPMorgan Chase 21.22%, Bank of America 19.25% and CitiBank 12.35%). Add American Express (10.19%) and Capital One (6.95%) – and it becomes clear that five firms control almost 70% of American’s credit card market.

The new Wall Street reform has gone a long way to prevent the kind of recklessness and financial sector meltdown that collapsed the economy and cost eight million Americans their jobs. Democrats passed that bill passed, over virtually unanimous Republican opposition, on the strength of massive public support. There is plenty of political support among the voters to take the next step and break up the monopoly power of the big Wall Street Banks.

After all, the only way to completely guarantee that no financial institution is ever again “too big to fail” is to invoke the yardstick that if it’s too big to fail, it’s simply too big.

For a long time a group of sharp guys and gals on Wall Street have run one hell of a game on everyday Americans. We've been played for chumps. Isn't it time for us to wake up and end a system where a few Wall Street Bankers have a license to siphon money out of the pockets of the middle class?

Coral,

How's this:

One of the items that Brian championed for the budget and State of the Union was an initiative to catalyze $2 billion of investments in clean energy innovation through a public private investment strategy. The Clean Energy Investment Initiative got left on the SOTU cutting room floor as the speech got more thematic and less a list of new initiatives. Brian was determined to get it launched and did so at his first big climate/energy public appearance at the February ARPA-E summit, with commitments from Wells Fargo, Hewlett Foundation, UC Regents, among others to participate.

Hi, John,

Thanks so much for taking the time to chat about Brian. The story's mostly set, but we're looking for one more anecdote that shows him in action on climate change. Could you think of a moment when you recall him being in the room, doing something specific on climate, as the plans were being made to pass on the reins to him?

Any example you could think of would be welcome!

thanks so much,

Subject: [big campaign] McCain On 'Black Monday': Fundamentals Of The Economy Are Still Strong

McCain repeated -- this morning -- that the "fundamentals of our economy are strong"... video below

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2008/09/15/mccain-fundamentals-of-th\_n\_126445.html

McCain On 'Black Monday': Fundamentals Of The Economy Are Still Strong

John McCain may want to refine his economic message a bit more during this potentially disastrous week for the financial sector.

On the campaign trail in Jacksonville, Florida, the Senator declared this morning that "the fundamentals of our economy are strong," despite what he described as "tremendous turmoil in our financial markets and Wall Street."

The line may seem like GOP boilerplate, save for the fact that this morning, the McCain campaign released a television ad that began: "Our economy is in crisis." Moreover, with financial and job markets in disarray, and with Lehman Brothers, the troubled investment bank, filing for bankruptcy, it may not be the wisest political message to tell voters that the fundamentals are a-okay.

"You know," said McCain, "there's been tremendous turmoil in our financial markets and Wall Street and it is -- people are frightened by these events. Our economy, I think, still the fundamentals of our economy are strong. But these are very, very difficult time. And I promise you, we will never put America in this position again. We will clean up Wall Street. We will re- reform government."

Many conservatives and McCain supporters have argued, against the prevailing sentiment, that despite Wall Street's failings, the economy is actually on firm footing. Donald Luskin, who described himself as "an adviser to John McCain's campaign," made such an argument in Sunday's Washington Post . But despite modest growth and relatively low unemployment rates, many economists see dire signs in today's economic landscape. On Sunday, former fed chairman Alan Greenspan said the market was the worst he had ever witnessed and predicted another major bank would close soon. Meanwhile, inflation is rising, real wages are declining, and the problems in the housing market persist.

[VIDEO]

McCain acknowledged, to various degrees, these topics in his Monday morning speech.

"I promise you we will never put America in this position again," McCain said. "This is a failure. We've got take every action to build an environment of robust energy supplies, lower inflation, control health care costs, access to international markets, low taxes and reduce burden of government to allow people to move forward toward a future of prosperity."

But his proclamation that the fundamentals of it all remained positive is surely music to Democratic ears.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: Immigration going to be a big issue in this campaign?

In the past, you've said that undocumented immigrants would not be covered by your health care proposals. Here's an exchange we had in 2007.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: Would illegal immigrants be covered under your plan?

CLINTON: Illegal immigrants would not be covered. No. They would not be covered. I will continue to have a safety net, which I think is in the best traditions of our country and also for public health reasons absolutely necessary.

But we did not cover them in '93, '94 and my plan does not cover them now.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: Now you say that undocumented immigrants should be able to buy into the exchanges. So why the shift?

HILLARY CLINTON: Well, because number one the kind of plan that was passed in the Affordable Care Act gives you a market-based way of getting into the insurance market. So, if you can afford to buy a policy, you can. You don't get, however, any of the subsidies that American citizens get.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: Martin O'Malley says they should. Why not?

HILLARY CLINTON: Well, I disagree with him. I think part of comprehensive immigration reform should be looking at all of these issues. But as things stand right now, under the Affordable Care Act, if you have the money and you are undocumented, you can buy into it, but without the subsidies. That's why it's important we continue to support community health centers, we continue to support our hospitals because those are often the places that undocumented people and poor people go.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS: And what's the reason for not going further?

HILLARY CLINTON: Because I don't think legally you can. I mean, that is not something that we can legally support. The law is very clear about that.

were you able to find the comments she made about health care on the Sunday morning program (I think it was This Week)?

On Wed, Feb 17, 2016 at 3:53 PM, Sara Solow <ssolow@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Here is what she said in Windham on Nov. 10. It does express support for continued border security -- today. But I think we can use the answer we've prepped, and which you'll see soon, which says: we don't need more walls; we've invested a ton in this and the border is more secure than in years; it's time to focus on CIR.

QUESTION: Hi. Hi, Secretary Clinton. I was wondering what you think about, like, securing the Mexican border with some of the illegal immigrants that come in. Just wondering.

HILLARY CLINTON: Well, look, I voted numerous times when I was a senator to spend money to build a barrier to try to prevent illegal immigrants from coming in, and I do think you have to control your borders. But I think that it's also true that we need to do more to try to, number one, deal with the people who are already here, many of whom have been here for decades, because it is just never going to happen that we're going to round up and deport 11 or 12 million people. I don't care how tall the wall is or how big the door is, that is never going to happen. (Applause.) And I think it is an unnecessarily provocative thing to say. We need to secure our borders; I'm for it, I voted for it, I believe in it. And we also need to deal with the families, the workers who are here, who have made contributions, and their children. And we -- Mexican immigration no longer is really the issue. The Mexican economy is doing well enough, we've had no net Mexican immigration in the last several years. We now get immigrants from Central America and Latin America, and a lot of them make a very dangerous trip with smugglers and traffickers to try to get into our country, and we need to do more to try to put some resources into those countries to try to deal with some of the conditions, particularly the violence, the drug dealers and the like that create that.

And we have an example of how effective the United States can be. When my husband was President, as you remember, there was a war going on in Colombia by drug traffickers and insurgent rebels. It was such a violent war that elected officials, business leaders, academics were being kidnapped, many of them murdered, otherwise held for ransom. And we did something called Plan Colombia, where we helped the government figure out how to secure their country from drug traffickers and rebels, and it took a number of years, but now it's a success story.

So we can do more to stop the problem from where it starts. We can do more to secure our border. And we should do more to deal with the 11 or 12 million people who are here, get them out of the shadows because we will have a better economic outcome if we do that. Because what happens now is if you're undocumented you will work for as little as you can be paid, and that influences the labor market and takes away jobs from Americans because there's no even playing field. If we get them out of the shadows and we enforce the labor laws, we will see a much better labor market for Americans and we will also see much more contribution into the Social Security and Medicare system as well as the taxes. I mean, right now we know that undocumented workers pay into the Social Security system many billions of dollars, but it could be even more.

So yeah, we have to do all of that. And to talk about just one piece of it I think is misleading and doesn't help us get to where we can solve the problems that we face. (Applause.)

McCain Plan Draws Doubts From Experts On Mortgages (WaPo 10/9/08)

By Dina ElBoghdady

Sen. John McCain's proposal to have the federal government directly buy and refinance troubled home loans would cost about $300 billion, his campaign said yesterday.

Taxpayers, Not Lenders, Would Bear Costs of McCain's Mortgage Proposal (NYT 10/9/08)

By JACKIE CALMES

The homeowner assistance plan that Senator John McCain announced without detail in the presidential debate Tuesday night would allow millions of financially stretched Americans to refinance their mortgages with government help, but it would leave taxpayers to cover the losses, rather than the financial institutions that hold the original mortgages.

Obama holds advertising advantage over McCain (AP 10/09/08)

By Jim Kuhnhenn

Barack Obama spent $3.3 million in TV advertising on Monday. At that rate the Democrat will spend more than $90 million on ads through Election Day - more than all the money Republican rival John McCain has to spend on his entire fall campaign.

McCain Says He Can Tackle The Economy (NPR 10/09/08)

By Scott Horsley

Since slipping behind in the polls, Republican hopeful John McCain has been intensifying his attacks on Democrat Barack Obama. Mindful that the economy is uppermost in voters' minds, McCain repeated Wednesday the proposal he floated in Tuesday's debate: having the government come directly to the aid of people whose homes have lost value and who can't meet their monthly payments.

McCain housing proposal: Easier said than done (AP 10/08/08)

By Julie Davis

Ordering the government to buy up bad mortgages to cut homeowners' monthly payments might sound good, but experts are skeptical. They say the plan John McCain is promoting is unlikely to solve the housing crisis that's pushing the economy toward recession.

The story about her staff is no doubt a problem. But if I was a reporter covering this and she in any way didn't lean right in on an issue she has been so vocal about, I would actually latch onto that. I'll defer to comms team but I think this issue has to be in the speech and she has to be as full-throated in talking about it, whether it's the first or third thing she talks about. So we're going to hit it hard anywhere it lands in the speech.

We're going to heave to deal with the facts in the story but we should just make sure that before we start diluting a strong position she has we decide whether staying strong isn't a better strategy.

Hello all. Agree with many of Mandy's comments - in partic staring with equal pay, having an women's economic issue soundbite, and making GOP section edgier.

Dan,

A few notes on the politics.

1. I'd connect the opening accomplishments a little more directly to Stephanie Schriock. This draft tilts a little too far to Ellen Malcolm and it's important to give Stephanie and Ellen at least equal billing. (For example, I wouldn't mention Ellen on page 8 right after you ask whether they want to see a woman president. That may be the soundbite of the day.)
2. I think you need a little more thought on the women you name. (Mikulski, Gillibrand, Warren, Boxer, Pelosi, Raimondo, Murray). Thinking about our New Hampshire politics, you ought to mention Governor Maggie Hassan -- who was the only female governor in the country til Raimondo was elected and Hassan just got reelected (also focusing on the economy). You also ought to mention Jeanne Shaheen -- who was just about the only Dem to win a tough Senate race last year (also focusing on the economy). In fact, on the Senate side, I would mention all the current female Senators -- you're only going to annoy Feinstein or Klobuchar or McCaskill et al if you pick out just a handful. You can do a list after you highlight a few.)
3. On Mikulski, instead of just noting her long ago election and the pantsuit stuff, I'd mention that she was the first woman to chair the Appropriations Committee and is now its ranking member. Maybe ditto Patty Murray as chair of the budget committee.
4. On "the year of the woman in 1992", I believe the number of women went from 2 to 5. I would note that it was great to almost triple the number of women in the senate but hard to imagine that electing a senate with 95 men and 5 women was called the year of the woman. (It's better now...but still.....)

On the economic message...

1. I'm queasy about leading with equal pay, given last week's stories about HRC staff. It also doesn't allow you to frame a broader argument about families and small businesses as the heart of our economy/future. I'd move equal pay to later in the economic section.
2. The section on workforce participation seems off to me also. Seems like our main solution is to have more women work.
3. Should we make the GOP line even edgier? Something like: "And, by the way, isn't it nice to see a few Republicans starting to dip their toes into the debate about how to create opportunities for working families? That means our arguments are resonating. So come on in, fellas, the waters fine. But you better offer something more than the same old tired trickle down economics. Families don't need any more of that.
4. Finally, I feel like we need a soundbite about women's issues are economic issues; economic issues are women's issues. Something like that. Right now, the most likely soundbite is the female president line. That's probably what the audience wants, but is that what we want? I'd love to have a strong economic soundbite too.

many thanks

Mandy

Dear John,

I hope you're doing well, and look forward to catching up sometime soon.

This July 8 and 9, thousands of community leaders from all over the country will gather in Pittsburgh for the Center for Popular Democracy's first national People's Convention. In a moment of real progressive momentum but also of urgent economic, racial, and environmental crises, representatives from many of the most dynamic community organizations in the country " CPD's network " will come together to build the power we need to fight back, and to win. The People's Convention will bring together national progressive leaders, community members, and organizers driving some of the boldest and most innovative social change initiatives in the country " to learn, to strategize, and to take action together.

There will be a prominent role for Secretary Clinton to speak, if she's able to come. Can you help connect us to the right scheduling folks?

Additional information on the convention is attached, and here are the basics on the CPD network, if that's helpful:

The Center for Popular Democracy works to create equity, opportunity and a dynamic democracy in partnership with high-impact base-building organizations, organizing alliances, and progressive unions.

You can read more about us here:

I've cc'd Leah from our office who can follow up with more details, more information about the People's Convention, and anything else that may be needed.

Thanks!

A Young Manager for Clinton Juggles Data and Old Baggage

By AMY CHOZICK MARCH 14, 2015

On MSNBC last week, 70-year-old James Carville denounced the coverage of his old friend Hillary Rodham Clinton's use of a personal email account at the State Department, ticking off two decades' worth of scandals surrounding the Clintons that he attributed to an irresponsible news media.

Mr. Carville complained to the host, Andrea Mitchell, that he had "lived through this."

"Do you remember Whitewater?" he asked. "Do you remember Filegate? You remember Travelgate? You remember Pardongate? You remember Benghazi?"

Meanwhile, far from the television lights, Robby Mook, the 35-year-old who is likely to manage Mrs. Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign, kept his head down and worked the phones from his standing desk to build a field operation in Iowa, set up technology to collect data to target voters and hire a campaign staff in a handful of key states. Mr. Mook was 12 and auditioning for school plays in Vermont when Bill Clinton was first elected president. He was a popular high school freshman when Kenneth W. Starr investigated Whitewater.

The uproar over Mrs. Clinton's use of personal email as secretary of state, which shielded her correspondence from public records requests, has presented the first media firestorm in her pursuit of the White House. But it has also revealed the stark generational divide that confronts her budding 2016 campaign.

Over more than two decades in national politics, the Clintons have amassed an army of well-meaning defenders who will bring to 2016 old battle wounds and axes to grind that date back to the White House and Arkansas — perhaps not the ideal message in a presumptive campaign that seeks to reintroduce the 67-year-old Mrs. Clinton as a fresh, forward-looking candidate.

It falls largely on Mr. Mook, and the band of young operatives he has assembled (called the Mook Mafia), to move the grievance-laden Clinton machine into the modern political age. The success of Mrs. Clinton's campaign will rest in part on whether this younger generation of earnest, data- and social-media-savvy operatives can prevail.

“They are going to be the first ones to hit the beach on D-Day,” said Chris Lehane, a Democratic operative and former aide to Mr. Clinton. “To get the campaign off the beach while under fire, the front-line troops will need to be in charge and empowered to run a modern-day, forward looking, smart campaign.”

The Clintons anointed Mr. Mook as much for his ease with data and technology as for his calm temperament. They value his rare ability to charm and include the abundant advice-givers without allowing them to become too intrusive. Still, asserting himself among so many influential veterans will not be easy.

Even as Mr. Mook was starting to build the infrastructure of the campaign, a crowded circle of advisers joined him in deliberating over how Mrs. Clinton should respond to the email controversy. They included John D. Podesta, her presumptive campaign chairman, who has known the Clintons since George McGovern’s presidential campaign in 1972; the former Clinton administration officials Cheryl D. Mills and James E. Kennedy; Huma Abedin, a longtime aide to Mrs. Clinton; and Mandy Grunwald, who has advised the Clintons since 1992.

Continue reading the main story

Ultimately, the strategy they settled on — having Mrs. Clinton publicly address the controversy on Tuesday — harked back to the approach used in 1994, when Mrs. Clinton, wearing a blush-colored sweater set, held a lengthy news conference to address the Whitewater inquiry and a 1970s commodities trade in Arkansas. Comparisons quickly erupted. “Mrs. Clinton is stuck in the ’90s,” declared the conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh.

The next day, the operation took its first coordinated step toward wrangling the Clintons’ old friends and former aides, like Mr. Carville. Mrs. Clinton’s 31-year-old press secretary, Nick Merrill, hosted a conference call with about 25 far-flung surrogates to make sure they delivered the same message about the emails.

Part of why Mr. Mook landed the job was that in 2013, as the campaign manager for Terry McAuliffe — a close friend to Mr. Clinton who is now governor of Virginia — he deftly nurtured the Clintons’ vast network of friends with frequent phone calls, but did not get distracted by the noise and drama that often attaches itself to the couple.

“Eighty percent of it is people just want to be heard, and Robby was always available,” said Tina Flournoy, chief of staff to Mr. Clinton.

He particularly impressed Mr. Clinton, who may be the ultimate strategist of his wife’s 2016 campaign. The former president checked in often about specific districts or counties, but Mr. Mook did not change course based on his influence, said Mr. McAuliffe, who compared him to “a horse in the Kentucky Derby” with blinders on.

“President Clinton loved him, and they had a great relationship,” Mr. McAuliffe said in an interview. “But Robby is happiest when he is in his office with his computers and his data.”

It helped, of course, that Mr. Mook led that campaign to an unlikely victory after Mr. McAuliffe’s first attempt at the governor’s office flamed out in the 2009 Democratic primary.

Brennan Bilberry, the McAuliffe campaign’s communications director, described Mr. Mook’s approach as “test everything, question assumptions and let data drive things.”

Mr. Mook was inducted into the extended Clinton family during the 2008 presidential primary, when he was Mrs. Clinton’s state campaign director in Indiana, Nevada and Ohio: three states that were rare bright spots for Mrs. Clinton in her bruising battle against Barack Obama.

But despite Mr. Mook’s efforts, the campaign did not keep pace with the Obama team’s use of social media, digital targeting and data analytics.

“The Clinton field program was not at the same level of sophistication,” said Geoff Garin, who succeeded Mark Penn as Mrs. Clinton's chief strategist in 2008 and was Mr. McAuliffe's pollster. "By the time of the 2013 campaign, Robby was advancing the state of the art rather than trying to catch up with it."

That will take some getting used to for the Clintons, who came to power when cellphones seemed state of the art. In her last campaign, Mrs. Clinton tapped Patti Solis Doyle, an aide since 1992, as manager. Ms. Doyle was later ousted, and Maggie Williams, another former White House aide to Mrs. Clinton, took over.

Continue reading the main story

"Maintaining your relationships and doing it well takes work, and it's a credit to them," Ms. Flournoy said of the Clintons.

The unassuming son of a retired physics professor and hospital administrator, Mr. Mook, who did not respond to messages seeking comment for this article, wears a simple uniform of chinos and a polo shirt. He keeps an exhausted campaign staff energized late nights with his goofy sense of humor, including a killer impersonation of Mr. Clinton.

Mr. Mook joined the McAuliffe campaign directly from his job as executive director of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee ("without even taking a day off," Mr. Garin said). He irked some old Clinton operatives by bringing in a mostly new campaign staff to help with Mr. McAuliffe's second attempt at the governor's office.

And the group surrounding him has its detractors, who say Mr. Mook has recreated the cliquish atmosphere that prevented fresh voices from penetrating the Clinton orbit in the past.

In November, ABC News reported on leaked messages from an email list operated by Mr. Mook and another young Democratic aide. The sophomoric jokes they contained about Mr. Clinton were not particularly damaging but did raise some concerns about their discretion.

But other episodes suggest a maturity to Mr. Mook. In 2008, after the Obama campaign's offices in Indiana were vandalized, he reached out to Mitch Stewart, Mr. Obama's state director, to offer him and his staff the use of the Clinton campaign space. The gesture, and others like it, endeared Mr. Mook not just to the Clintons but also to Obama aides, many of whom have signed on to senior positions under Mrs. Clinton.

Mr. Mook's experience working for the Clintons leaves him well-positioned to bridge the campaign's generational gap. "He's old from the perspective that he worked for the Clintons in 2008, and new enough that he wasn't really part of the inner circle of running the campaign," said Thomas R. Nides, a friend and adviser who worked for Mrs. Clinton at the State Department.

No one could have predicted that the first big test of his abilities would come so early, with the email controversy, but people close to Mr. Mook say he has blocked out the crisis and is focused on the expected start of the campaign in April.

"He will be, I think, in a Hillary campaign what he was in the McAuliffe campaign," said Ellen Qualls, a Democratic strategist based in Alexandria, Va. "King of avoiding distractions and shiny objects."

Hi Everyone,

Now that we're hopefully reaching a place of relative sanity again, I wanted to take a minute to send everyone a quick update on what's brewing in the press. We'll institutionalize a system going forward, but for the moment let me just run through a few things.

First, Amy Chozick at the NYT is writing a piece on Robby. He didn't talk to her for the piece but we sent some people her way. Looks like it will trace his life a little, have some colorful factoids in it (apparently Robby loves polo shirts), and based on the intel we have, the more irritating parts will be a look at how the wide web of Clintonland will be kept at bay, including WJC's office. To help on that last point Amy talked to Tina Flournoy last night who was fantastic.

Second, the Washington Post is working on a Haiti story about the Clintons' work there, either via the Department of State or the Clinton Foundation. It could run as early as Monday, and will be a look at the progress (or in their view the lack thereof) and what the Clintons' role in it has been. I'm working closely with the Foundation on the response.

Related, there are some other Foundation-related stories in the offing, so I will keep people posted on that front.

Finally, we've been going back and forth with TIME about a particular component of their piece on Thursday that claimed no one read many of the emails, implication being that the search parameters outlined in the Q&A were applied and anything that didn't show up in them was discarded as "personal." We've pushed back pretty hard and gone on the record telling them that they are wrong. We are also hoping to put the counter-narrative out there with the help of Laura Meckler at the WSJ, which I'll send when it posts. Will keep everyone posted on this front as well.

Hillary Releases Twenty Thousand Spam E-Mails from Old Navy

WASHINGTON (The Borowitz Report)—Hoping to quell the controversy over e-mails missing from her private account, the former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Wednesday released twenty thousand spam e-mails she received from Old Navy.

"In an effort to be transparent, I have gone above and beyond what is required of me by law and released every last e-mail I received from this retailer," she told reporters. "Now I think we can all consider this case closed."

The e-mails reveal an extensive one-way correspondence between Clinton and Old Navy, as the retailer sometimes contacted her up to a dozen times in a single day to inform her of sales and other offers.

"This is one of the main reasons I set up a private e-mail account," she said. "I did not want spam from Old Navy clogging up the State Department servers."

But if the former Secretary of State thought that she could end the controversy swirling around her e-mail account by releasing the Old Navy spam, she may have miscalculated.

Representative Trey Gowdy, the Republican chairman of the House Benghazi select committee, questioned why Clinton would let twenty thousand spam e-mails from Old Navy accumulate rather than simply unsubscribe. "It doesn't pass the smell test," he said.

Responding to that allegation, Clinton said, "I want the American people to know that, on multiple occasions, I tried to unsubscribe from Old Navy, and my requests were ignored. The most frustrating part of this whole affair is that I've never even bought anything from Old Navy.”

Here's a new version. Gibbs, I said they meeting lasted for "over an hour" since part of the 2-3:47 was a white house tour. Please let me know when BO signs off. Thanks. (Also, below is the read out of the Michelle/Laura Bush meeting)

"President-elect Barack Obama and Mrs. Michelle Obama were very warmly received today at the White House by President George Bush and First Lady Laura Bush. Upon arriving, President-elect Obama and President Bush proceeded to the Oval Office, where they had a productive and friendly meeting that lasted for over an hour. They had a broad discussion about the importance of working together throughout the transition of government in light of the nation's many critical economic and security challenges. President-elect Obama thanked President Bush for his commitment to a smooth transition, and for his and First Lady Laura Bush's gracious hospitality in welcoming the Obama's to the White House."

Read out for Michelle Obama:

This afternoon, the President-elect and Mrs. Obama visited the White House, where they were warmly welcomed at the South Portico entrance by President Bush and the First Lady. After a brief private meeting, the First Lady led Mrs. Obama on a tour of the White House that focused primarily on the private residence of the historic home. After this tour, the First Lady and Mrs. Obama sat together and visited in the West Sitting Hall, where they discussed raising daughters in the White House, as Jenna and Barbara Bush were similar in age to Malia and Sasha Obama when they visited their grandfather, President George H. W. Bush, during his presidency. Mrs. Obama was honored to finally meet the First Lady, who was a gracious hostess. Following their visit, Mrs. Obama met with Admiral Rochon, the White House Chief Usher.

Friends:

My colleague Eliot Pence and I hope you can join us for a breakfast fundraiser on Tuesday, August 5, on the margins of the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit, with one of the Senate's foremost voices on Africa issues and U.S.-Africa commercial engagement: Senator Chris Coons of Delaware.

Senator Coons serves as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on African Affairs and has consistently been a strong advocate for U.S. commercial interests in Africa. I first got to know him early during his first run for Senate and am proud to call him a friend. His passion for Africa runs deep: he worked as a volunteer for the South African Council of Churches and as a relief worker in Kenya, and he knows the continent well. As a longtime business executive, he also understands commercial and trade issues well.

In addition to his service on the Foreign Relations Committee, Sen. Coons is a member of the Appropriations, Judiciary, and Budget committees.

The breakfast will be held on Tuesday, August 5 from 8:00-9:00 AM at the offices of the Biotechnology Industry Organization (BIO), at 1201 Maryland Avenue SW, Suite 900, Washington, DC. For those attending the events of the U.S.-Africa Business Forum on August 5th, BIO is across the street from the Mandarin Oriental Hotel, where the Forum is being held, and the roundtable discussion will conclude before the day's meetings begin.

Further background on Sen. Coons can be found below. Event details are below and in the attached invitation. Please note that due to heightened security, all guests must RSVP for the reception no later than Wednesday, July 30, via email to amie@chriscoons.com .

Eliot and I hope you will be able to join us on August 5th.

All the best,

About Sen. Chris Coons:

In two years as a United States Senator after winning a special election to succeed Senator Biden, Chris Coons has earned a reputation as a principled and pragmatic lawmaker, focused on some of the most important issues confronting Delaware and the nation. He has emerged as a strong voice for job creation and the innovation economy, responsible deficit reduction, progressive social justice, and a forward-looking foreign policy. Chris excels on the issues of women's reproductive rights, the U.S.-Israel relationship, gun violence prevention, energy policy and much more.

About the Report

The fossil fuel divestment movement, currently active on more than 1,000 college and university campuses, is an attack on freedom of inquiry and responsible social advocacy in American higher education. The movement asks colleges and universities to withdraw investments from coal, oil, and natural gas companies. More importantly, it aims to turn the endowment into a billboard for virtue signaling and to recast the university as a political weapon. This fall, divestment activists are using divestment to seed a radical campaign to push for a strong climate pact at the UN climate summit in Paris this December. This report closely examines the movement's structure, critiques its goals, and offers the most exhaustive encyclopedia of its activity, successes, and failures to date.

Subject: A new partner in the effort to inform Americans about the value of government -- Indivisible

July 17, 2015

Dear John,

This week marked the launch of a new partner organization in the effort to inform the American public about the value of government. Indivisible is a new initiative – deliberately nonpolitical, and particularly – but not exclusively – aimed at informing and energizing millennials.

Instead of weighing in on issues or the content of government, Indivisible will focus on its potential. It will generate an online conversation to help people better understand government's potential and the role we need our government to play to create the kind of country we want in the future.

We look forward to partnering with Indivisible in its efforts to expand the number of Americans engaged in an active conversation about what our government can and should be.

To hear more and to sign up to receive information, visit Indivisible's new website: www.indivisible.us.

Thank you for being an engaged citizen. Now, more than ever, our country needs you!

I would not say he directed it by candidate (but for some reason I think he intimated better for Ds w HRC- but can't be held to it). He discussed Illinois, Wisconsin and some others better for Ds , likely Pennsylvania too and Nevada for Rs. He said NH would go would follow General Election .

John, Jake-

(per my email here-"by memory")

Now that I am going on Fox more often I get invited to some interesting stuff & just got off my 1st ever "Big Call" (lol) with Frank Luntz. I have to admit I had no idea what to expect but was pretty impressed by the depth & breadth of the call as well as the diverse audience & questions. I think at least 100 nationwide leaders were on the call (likely 2-1 Rs to Ds), it was an hour and questions came from people from Amazon, Southern Company, NFL, Cancer Research (something) and Putnam to name a few. I will be going into some abstract detail as I never know what is important for you all: I want to be clear at no time was he disrespectful to Potus nor HRC but the questions certainly showed a right leaning audience.

1. He opened up recommending everyone goes to see 13 Hours but made it clear it is not an Obama nor Clinton bashing but tells the story of what really happened.
2. He began with Dems and said Bernie wins both Iowa & New Hampshire, but in same breadth predicted HRC is the nominee. He was very clear that Bernie's ground game is being underestimated and the primary will last longer than anyone expected. He also said that Bernie and Trump benefits from (I think he used the phrase) Open Primary and thus South Carolina will be closer than expected (and HRC gets hurt the most).
3. He predicted Cruz beats Trump in Iowa and will not be as close as everyone expects.
4. He has Trump winning New Hampshire, Cruz in 2nd and thinks Christie could pull ahead of Rubio to 3rd. He views that after New Hampshire both Bush & Kasich drop. Thus South Carolina goes in with 5 Rs (adding Carson).
5. He says that the Repubs are discussing brokered convention and real meetings are happening but no one's too sure who takes role of lead architect. If it is a brokered convention then HRC wins big as Trump voters won't come out.
6. He says Trump is now at 40% probability to win the nomination and although at highest probability he still has Cruz winning because other R votes when people drop out will not go to him.
7. He highlighted that both Bernie and Trump are benefiting the most from Independents which he found surprising due to their polarizing nature.
8. Some call in questions (I am only going to focus on one w HRC) :
  - A. Discuss the Black vote: was clear that the evidence shows that the economy (income inequality) has hit this group harder than anyone by far under Obama's 7 years and thus this could impact HRC with get out the vote.
  - B. How important is likeability -he said very and used the "who do you want to have a beer" analogy still resonates (ie-Obama, Bush-yes/ Romney, Kerry -no). Felt this helps Trump the most and not anyone else.

C. Do the recent comments by Trump on President Clinton hurt HRC and does the “enabler” phrase stick. He said Trump’s comments did hurt HRC (and he was incredibly surprised that she even responded). He also said if either Trump/Cruz win that they will use Bill Cosby case as brutal comparison.

D. Recent HRC emails, he viewed that 2 emails are tough ones for HRC to explain and the FBI stigma will be a real overhang.

E. The other questions were away from HRC and on funding, Senate races (thinks D’s do well with HRC), and others.

Happy to answer any & all on above,

RW

John & Mary --

That's the day my friends are hosting a fundraising lunch for my campaign committee at the Hotel at Arundel Reserve. The invitation is below.

I hope you can join us -- or, if not, at least make a contribution.

This is my 20th year in the Maryland legislature. I served 11 years in the House, all on the Ways and Means Committee, and, for the past 9 years, in the Senate.

In that time, I've had the opportunity to help Maryland improve its schools, roads and transit, public safety, and environment. And to help ordinary citizens and business solve problems.

This year I'm focused on expanding retirement savings options for private sector workers, rehabbing more schools at lower cost, and creating apprenticeships for young people to learn skills to earn living wages.

To do this work, I need to communicate with my constituents regularly and be prepared to campaign. That takes money and that's why I'm asking for your help.

Thanks for your consideration and I look forward to hearing from you!

White House Suspends New Drilling
Oil Spill Hits Gulf Coast Shoreline

GULF COAST – As oil from a massive Gulf Coast offshore drilling disaster began to touch the shoreline, White House senior adviser David Axelrod announced on Good Morning America that "no additional drilling has been authorized and none will until we find out what happened here."

In response to the spill, Sierra Club has created an online Oil Spill Action Center with updated information, and volunteer sign-ups. <http://www.sierraclub.org/oilspill>

Statement of Sierra Club Executive Director Michael Brune:

We are pleased that the White House is signaling a suspension of any new off-shore drilling during the investigation, but there should be no doubt left that drilling is too dirty and dangerous for our coasts and the people who live there. This offshore facility was supposed to be state-of-the-art. We've been assured again and again that the hundreds of offshore drilling rigs along our beaches are completely safe. Now, we've seen workers tragically killed. We've seen our ocean lit on fire, and now we're watching hundreds of thousands of gallons of toxic oil seep towards wetlands and wildlife habitat.

This same disaster could happen at any one of the hundreds of drilling platforms off our coasts, at any moment. It could happen at the drilling sites they've proposed opening along the beaches of the Atlantic Coast.

We don't need to pay this price for energy. We have plenty of clean energy solutions already in place that will end our dependence on dirty fossil fuels, create good, safe jobs, and breathe new life into our economy. We can save more oil through simple efficiency measures than could be recovered by new drilling on our coastlines.

This disaster changes everything. We have hit rock-bottom in our fossil fuel addiction. This tragedy should be a wake up call. It's time to take offshore drilling off the table for good.

Oil Spill Facts:

- * The oil spill exceeds the worst-case scenario predicted by BP when it filed its exploration plan with the government. The spill is estimated at roughly 210,000 gallons a day. In BP's exploration plan, the company outlined a worst-case scenario of 162,000 gallons a day.

- * The disaster may have been prevented by a special shut-off switch, but BP did not purchase the switch and after drilling companies questioned its cost and effectiveness, the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service, which oversees offshore drilling, decided the device wasn't needed. [Wall St. Journal 4/30/2010]

- * At its current rate, the spill could surpass by next week the size of the 1969 Santa Barbara spill that helped lead to the far-reaching moratorium on oil and gas drilling off the Pacific and Atlantic coasts

- * Some estimates show it could take 3-4 months to contain the spill. By that time, the spill could exceed the size of the 1989 Exxon Valdez spill in Alaska.

- * 59 Fatalities, More Than 1,300 Injuries, 853 Fires. There have been nearly 60 casualties and more than 1,300 injuries on the rigs in the Gulf of Mexico alone since 2001. "Working in the oil industry is more dangerous than working in coal mines." [CBS, 4/22/2010]

BP Facts:

* $5.6 Billion In Profits. During the first quarter of 2010, "BP said its profit rose to $6.08 billion from $2.56 billion during the same period of 2009. Excluding the impact of energy prices on unsold inventories as well as $49 million of one-time items, and BP would have earned $5.65 billion, topping consensus estimates by about $900 million." Profits increased 135% from 2009. [Bloomberg, 4/27/2010]

* 41% Raise For BP's CEO. "Chief Executive Tony Hayward's total remuneration and share awards rose 41% in 2009 on performance bonuses from improved operations which made the company one of the best performing oil majors in the fourth quarter, despite lower full-year profits due to the fall in the oil price." [Wall Street Journal, 3/5/2010]

* $16 Million In Lobbying. BP spent $16 million lobbying in 2009. [Opensecrets]

* $3 Billion In The World's Dirtiest Oil. Meanwhile the company invested $3 billion in 2007 in the dirtiest source of oil on earth: Canadian tar sands. "The result will be the development of a major new Canadian oil field and the modernization and expansion of the Toledo refinery to allow far greater use of Canadian heavy oil and to increase clean fuels production by as much as 600,000 gallons a day." [Climate Progress, 12/18/2007]

* $900 Million In Alternative Energy Budget Cuts. In 2009, BP cut its alternative energy budget to between $500 million and $1 billion from $1.4 billion in 2008. "BP has shut down its alternative energy headquarters in London, accepted the resignation of its clean energy boss and imposed budget cuts in moves likely to be seen by environmental critics as further signs of the oil group moving "back to petroleum." ## Defeat ISIS

By Hillary Clinton

These past few days, all of us have tried to make sense of yet another senseless terrorist attack. I know that Americans are anxious and fearful, and we have reason to be. The threat is real. The need for action is urgent.

Our intelligence and law enforcement agencies will continue learning about what led to the massacre in San Bernardino just as French and Belgian authorities are doing so in Paris and Brussels. But this much we do know: The threat from radical jihadism has metastasized and become more complex and challenging. We're seeing the results of radicalization not just in far-off lands but right here at home fueled by the internet. It's the nexus of terrorism and technology, and we have a lot of work to do to end it.

As hard as this is, Americans now have to move from fear to resolve. America has beaten bigger threats before, and we will defeat this one as well.

Resolve means depriving jihadists of virtual territory just as we work to deprive them of actual territory. They are using websites, social media, chat rooms, and other platforms to celebrate beheadings, recruit future terrorists, and call for attacks. We should work with host companies to shut them down. It's time for an urgent dialogue between the government, and not just our government – government and the high-tech community to confront this problem together.

Resolve means supporting also our first responders, like the officer in San Bernardino who said he would take a bullet for the civilians he was rescuing. We owe them our support and gratitude and whatever help they need. Local law enforcement should get the support, training, and coordination they need in their communities from counterterrorism experts in Washington. It also means taking a close look at safeguards in visa programs and working more effectively with our European allies on intelligence and information sharing. And yes, Congress must act to ensure that no one who is a suspected terrorist can buy guns anywhere in America.

Resolve means going after the threat at its source in Iraq and Syria and beyond. Our goal must not be to deter or contain ISIS; our goal must be to defeat ISIS. And I have put forth a three-prong plan to do that.

First, deny ISIS territory in Iraq and Syria by leading an intensified air campaign and working with local and regional forces on the ground. Second, dismantle the global infrastructure of terror, the networks that supply radical jihadists with money, weapons, and fighters, and stop them from recruiting and inspiring. And third, toughen our defenses at home and those of our partners against external and homegrown threats.

An effective fight on the ground against ISIS is essential, but that does not mean deploying tens of thousands of American combat troops.

It does mean stepping up efforts to get more Arabs and Kurdish fighters into the fight against ISIS on both sides of the Iraq-Syrian border, supporting the Iraqi Security Forces while pressuring Baghdad to pursue a more inclusive and effective approach, and immediately deploying the Special Operations Forces that President Obama has already authorized with more to follow as more Syrians get into the fight. We also have to demand that our Arab and Turkish partners carry their share of the burden with military, financial, and diplomatic contributions. We will do our part, but it's their fight too, and they need to act like it is.

Dealing with the conflict in Syria with respect to Assad is central to this whole effort. We need to continue Secretary Kerry's efforts to move toward a diplomatic solution to the civil war in Syria that paves the way for new leadership and enables Syrians from every community to take on ISIS. Investing the Russians in this outcome and getting them to step up and do their part will be difficult but essential. And we have to pursue a transition away from Assad and an intensified fight against ISIS simultaneously. We're not going to get Syrian opposition forces to fight ISIS in earnest without the credible prospect of a transition, and that's going to take more pressure and leverage. It's one of the reasons why I have proposed creating a no-fly zone as well as safe havens and more robust support for opposition forces.

And finally, it's crucial that we embed our mission to defeat ISIS within a broader struggle against radical jihadism.

Extremist groups like ISIS feed off instability and conflict, and there is no shortage of that in the Middle East today. Decades of repression, poverty, corruption, a lack of pluralism and tolerance turn the region into a powder keg. That's why we have to keep working with our friends and partners to support economic and political modernization; train effective and accountable local intelligence, law enforcement, and counterterrorism services. And once and for all, the Saudis, the Qataris, the Kuwaitis, and others must stop their citizens from funding extremist organizations and stop supporting radical schools and mosques around the world that have set too many young people on a path toward extremism.

So across the board, we must act with courage and clarity. And it's important to remind ourselves that Islam itself is not our adversary. This is not and we should not let it become a clash of civilizations. It is a clash between hate and hope -- and the vast majority of Muslims are on our side of the battle unless we drive them away. We can't buy into the very narrative that radical jihadists use to recruit new followers or alienate partners we want and need at home and abroad with reckless rhetoric. Declaring war on Islam or demonizing the Muslim American community is not only counter to our values; it plays right into the hands of terrorists.

Muslim Americans are our neighbors, our co-workers, loved ones, friends. Many are working every day all over our country to prevent radicalization. We should be supporting them, not scapegoating them. But, at the same time, none of us can close our eyes to the fact that we do face enemies who use Islam to justify slaughtering innocent people. We have to stop them and we will. Radical jihadists, like so many adversaries in our history, underestimate the strength of our national character. Americans will not cower or cave, and we will not turn on each other or turn on our principles. We will defeat those who threaten us. We will keep our country safe and strong, free and tolerant.

I spent two months this winter in NH looking into how to position climate change in the republican party.

I'm writing to you today to see if you have ten minutes this week about how to position Tom Steyer and his climate changer efforts more effectively on the 2016 presidential chessboard.

I strongly believe there is an opportunity to engage Republican primary voters in both NH and Florida on climate change in a manner that creates an opening for Republicans to move and if not shuts the door to these same voters in the general election.

It focuses on "American Exceptionalism" and makes use of the potential power of the UN Paris treaty this December.

I can make myself available at any time day or night. I'm anxious to make this call happen this week before Gene Karpinski sits down with Tom Steyer next week.

How a single multinational corporation could light up the world

With cash reserves already in the bank, even one big US company could singlehandedly improve a billion lives, reduce global inequality, slash carbon emissions – and make money

A composite image of Europe, Africa, and the Middle East at night, assembled from data acquired by the Suomi NPP satellite. The World Bank estimates 550 million people – nearly half of the population – lack electricity in Africa. Photograph: NASA/Reuters

Most Americans take turning lights on for granted. But one in five people in the world still can't plug anything in. The World Bank estimates 1.2 billion people lack electricity all together – resulting in millions of premature deaths yearly – and many more have undependable or unaffordable electricity service.

A high majority of those without electricity live in India, which averages 5.3 people per household, and in African countries, which range from 4.5 to 6.5 people per household, according to UN and World Bank data. By dividing 1.2 billion by 4.5, the most conservative number of residents per household, we can estimate that roughly 250 million households lack electricity.

Meanwhile, solar photovoltaic cells, batteries and LED lights have grown so cheap and durable that an "off-grid" household – spending less than it would dole out on kerosene over two years – can harvest enough electricity to power lights and charge a cellphone for decades. In Africa, for example, companies such as Azuri Technologies and M-KOPA Solar already sell "pay-as-you-go" electrification systems for as little as $1.50 per month.

At $200 each for these systems, a total of $50bn in loans – over several years – would be enough to finance the electricity to light up dark homes in Africa and India.

These loans would immediately improve lives in the world's poorest households and substitute renewable energy for some of the dirtiest fossil fuels. But progress so far has been slow and small. In spite of some big government goals – such as US government's Beyond the Grid initiative, which plans to invest $1bn to get power to 20 million people in Africa in five years, and India's goal, missed in 2012, to get electricity to every household by 2019 – experts figure broad electrification will take decades.

All this adds up to an enormous opportunity for US multinationals to make history with bold game-changing investments that will bring a billion people into the global economy – and to profit in the process.

Children in Kisima, Kenya, studying at night using a flame on a stick. Photograph: Tony

Karumba/AFP/Getty Images

Right now, US companies are sitting on international profits 200 times greater than the $50bn needed for these loans. But bringing home more than $2tn in profit would cost billions in corporate taxes. So companies wait, find ways to park their funds overseas and hope for an unlikely tax holiday as their “problem” grows. Just last year, these idle overseas amounts grew 11.8%.

Some companies have enough in overseas billions – take Apple's \$138bn , GE's \$110bn , Microsoft's \$93bn , IBM's $52bn, Cisco's $48bn and Google's $48bn – that just one of them could take on the whole job singlehandedly. Another lender could jump in to finance bigger systems for households or villages, or to fund renewable replacements for the sooty biomass that 2.5 billion people now use for heating and cooking (resulting in approximately 1.5 million deaths from fumes and smoke annually).

A corporate pioneer could create a giant working capital fund, move quickly with pilot projects and experienced local partners, then get big fast with savvy international intermediaries. Sure, there are investment obstacles today. But there are also smart people – CEOs, CFOs, sustainability teams and others – who could certainly identify and hurdle these barriers for a first-mover advantage on an opportunity of this size.

Investments would be loans, and investments in promising commercial ventures, not philanthropy, and a successful program could set margins to yield competitive returns.

Unlike microfinance for individuals, working capital funds would go to companies – experienced manufacturers and vendors – that would supply the systems. With this funding, these companies could grow manufacturing, education and marketing efforts, sales and collections.

Cellphone-enabled pay-as-you-go technologies that provide validation codes when installment payments are received reduce the risk of nonpayment to the companies. And these systems stop working if they are stolen or if their electricity is diverted, further reducing the risk.

The world would applaud any company that enabled a billion people in villages and rural areas to get light and connectivity, stop spending \$36bn a year on kerosene and join the global economy.

This move would represent a groundbreaking, successful and profitable response – well beyond business as usual – to both inequality and climate change. It would quickly improve global living standards while slashing greenhouse gases and black carbon .

Which company will step up to put its cash to good use, take a big bite out of fossil fuels and light up the world?

Daniel M Kammen , a physicist, is the director of the University of California at Berkeley's Renewable and Appropriate Energy Laboratory . He directed the World Bank's renewable energy and energy efficiency programs from 2010 to 2011, and has been a contributing lead author for the UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change for the past 15 years.

Felix Kramer is an entrepreneur, climate activist, cleantech advisor and investor. He led The California Cars Initiative 's successful 10-year campaign to get automakers to make and sell plug-in hybrid cars.

Subject: Summary of meeting of the Executive Committee of the Knox College Board of Trustees, Friday, December 11, 2015

Trustees and Trustees Emeriti,

I'm writing to report on the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Knox College Board of Trustees on Friday, December 11, 2015.

The meeting began with consideration of the proposal for comprehensive fees for the academic year 2016-2017. It has been the practice for over 20 years for the Executive Committee to review and approve the comprehensive fee proposal at either its December or January meeting. Keith Archer and Paul Steenis presented their analysis and rationale for the proposed fee increase of 3.5%. After a brief discussion, with Doug Bayer and Jerry Vovis voicing support, the committee approved the proposal.

Teresa then updated the committee on recent developments, including the continuing delay by the Illinois legislature in approving MAP payments, the passing of longtime groundskeeper Andy Pitman (who led the beautification efforts on campus), and her assessment of the finalists in the search for the position of Vice President for Student Affairs.

Next, she updated the committee on two facilities projects:

1. Plans to renovate the former admissions office in the Center for Fine Arts (CFA) for use as an art gallery: earlier this year the college received a gift to support the production of initial drawings for a renovation of CFA, and these plans have now been vetted with the faculty that use the building. The next step, also to be supported by funds previously received, is to draw up specific plans for the art gallery space, for which a donor has been identified.
2. Green Oaks Project. Teresa informed the committee that she's looking forward to discussing with trustees in February questions and issues that were raised about the Green Oaks project.

Jerry Vovis and I then reported on the progress made by the Task Force on Socially Responsible Investing, under Joe Bastian's leadership. Joe will be meeting with students on campus in late January to discuss their concerns about endowment transparency, and he will report back to the task force. It is expected that the task force will complete its work and make a recommendation to the board at its February meeting.

Sue Blew and I then updated the committee on planning for the April 2016 board retreat. A retreat task force has been appointed: Sue Blew (chair), Isabelle Goossen, Ellie Hartog, Steve Luetger, Laura Rosene, Dave Schulz, Kyle Winning, and Sue Zucker. The group will meet early in the new year to advance planning for the retreat, which is scheduled for April 29 – May 1 at the Union League Club in Chicago.

I reported that I'd be visiting campus next week on December 17 and 18 to meet with members of the President's Council to begin planning for the February board meeting and with faculty members on FASCOM to discuss the proposal to add faculty and students as voting members of standing committees.

Jan Sharry briefed the committee on an idea that she had learned about from a trustee at Austin College, where trustees formed an LLC to finance the construction of a dormitory on campus. With the encouragement of Teresa and Keith, she is working up more information on this idea and will keep the committee informed of developments.

Laurel will post the minutes of the Executive Committee meeting in the near future. If after reading them you have any questions, please let her or me know.

Thanks – and Happy Holidays!

Best,

Richard

good morning people. quick note. today marks 8 years of being sober and i want to tell you how extremely grateful i am to you for sticking by me through my journey -- wherever it has taken me and has yet to take me. i feel humbled and super lucky to have you in my life -- to laugh with, learn from and lean on. I know I'm in good hands!

to steal from the late david carr:

Thanks for being part of my caper. Looking forward to the year to come... one day at a time.

Dear David,

Following the successful launch of our web ad "Lobbyists, lobbyists" <<http://www.firethelobbyists.com/>> (to the tune of "Lollipop, lollipop") we decided to have some more fun.

With your help, we'd like to send 115 "lobby-pops" to John McCain -- one for every lobbyist staffing or raising money for his campaign. We only ask that you make a small donation of $4.85 <https://secure.ga3.org/03/lobby\_pop/> to offset the cost of the production and shipping and handling of these suckers to McCain headquarters.

As you've undoubtedly heard, John McCain has a lobbyist problem. It's become an image problem, and it's apparently had an impact on his support for reform. McCain used to support comprehensive public financing for all federal elections, but since he surrounded himself with lobbyists to run and fund his campaign, he's retreated from making reform a priority.

Our campaign to "Fire the Lobbyists" <<http://www.firethelobbyists.com/>> has generated national headlines in leading papers all over the country. But Sen. McCain continues to defend lobbyists like Charlie Black, who lobbied for foreign dictators, terrorist rebels, and unsavory foreign interests that offend American values.

Let's make sure he can't avoid our message. Send him a lobby-pop <https://secure.ga3.org/03/lobby\_pop/> -- with his picture on it -- and tell him to fire the lobbyists today.

Thanks,

NEA executive director urges members to demand education equity, excellence

John Stocks tells educators, “We want to democratize opportunity, not commoditize it.”

ATLANTA - July 04, 2013 -

National Education Association Executive Director John Stocks called on the members of the nation’s largest professional organization to declare their “independence from privateers who want to turn public education into another industry for profit.” Speaking to delegates at NEA’s 92nd Representative Assembly in Atlanta, Stocks predicted “a rising tide of resistance” to the bad actors and bad ideas attempting to dominate the education reform debate. Stocks urged NEA members to define, demand, practice and lead excellence in public education.

Following are Stocks’ remarks as prepared for delivery:

Thank you Dennis, Lily, Becky, members of the Executive Committee, the NEA Board of Directors, delegates, and the NEA staff. I’d like to recognize and honor five leaders who have been my colleagues and mentors in this association. They’ve given decades of service to the organization.

They are five State Executive Directors who will be retiring: from Washington State, John Okamoto; from New York, Pauline Kinsella; from New Jersey, Vince Giordano; from California, Carolyn Doggett; and the Dean of the State Executive Directors from the Great state of Ohio, Larry Wicks.

Please join me in thanking them for all they have done to improve the lives of millions of students, educators and community members in their states and across this country.

Happy 4th of July, NEA!

Celebrating our nation’s independence is something we do each year with great pride—pride in our national resolve, pride in our democratic system of government, pride in being a land of freedom and great opportunity.

It’s so powerful to be here in Atlanta, the birthplace of many great leaders, like Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and the home of so much civil rights history. As Dennis reminded us all yesterday, we are approaching the 50th anniversary of the March on Washington.

I’m proud that the NEA will participate in this historic event, just as we did 50 years ago. In Washington and across the country, we will remind our students and our communities that the “Dream” lives on, that it’s worth fighting for, that it is essential to becoming a more perfect union.

When I addressed this body last year, I called upon all of us to be “social justice patriots.”

Well this past year, NEA members yet again have been shining examples of social justice patriotism, forging paths of greater opportunity for students, fighting against injustices, and standing with communities in the face of hardships and too many tragedies.

NEA members from Pennsylvania, Florida, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Virginia, and Wisconsin trained with us and the NAACP to fight voter suppression. Thank you social justice patriots!

And NEA members in Texas held town hall meetings and clinics to ensure that undocumented students can gain access to college to pursue their dreams. Thank you social justice patriots!

NEA members in Connecticut, New York, Colorado, Maryland, California, and Delaware worked with your governors to pass stronger laws to prevent senseless tragedies like Sandy Hook. Thank you again social justice patriots!

NEA affiliates in Maine, Maryland, Rhode Island, Washington, and Minnesota stood with the LGBTQ community against bigotry and for marriage equality. Thank you social justice patriots!

And speaking of marriage equality, how about that wonderful Supreme Court decision striking down the Defense of Marriage Act!!

NEA, I hope you will join me now in giving a tremendous round of applause to NEA's General Counsel, Alice O'Brien, and her legal team for joining with our partners at Change to Win and the AFL-CIO to submit a brief in this case and help make history.

Alice, your leadership with your colleagues from other unions and organizations has been simply outstanding! You know, with all of this historic action at the Supreme Court, I've been thinking a lot about the word justice. By definition, the word justice is the principle of moral rightness, the quality of being fair.

I think about our nation's founders. As revolutionaries, it took courage and commitment to disrupt the status quo in order to create a brighter future. Their fight was about opportunity—opportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

It is this spirit that has fueled generation after generation of Americans with an almost insatiable appetite for opportunity.

But sisters and brothers, we know that in order to truly have equal opportunity, we must seek justice. And we know that justice is not freely given. It is forged out of struggle and sacrifice.

Next May we'll celebrate the 60th anniversary of the Brown v. Board of Education decision—one of the greatest contributions to equity of educational opportunity in our lifetime. The case launched the full racial integration of our public schools. It gave momentum to the entire Civil Rights movement.

Chief Justice Earl Warren in writing the Court's decision in 1954 said:

"In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms."

As we all know, the declaration in Brown was that separate schools for black and white children were inherently unequal. But the spirit of Brown was really about whether all children should have the same opportunities to learn.

And since 1954, we've made some great strides toward expanding opportunities for students. From Title IX to IDEA to guaranteeing English language learners equal access to education, NEA has been there fighting for students.

But since the 1970s, we've seen a systematic dismantling of many of the pillars of opportunity in this country—pillars that impact educational success and therefore impact our economic, social, and cultural vitality as a nation.

We've seen weaker enforcement of desegregation orders. We've struggled to maintain affirmative action programs in education. We've seen inaction by the federal government to guarantee equity of opportunity. And in state courts and capitol, the promise of Brown remains elusive.

Now, here's the appalling irony, my friends.

Every state constitution in the nation requires that states provide education to their children. Yet in 45 states in this country, citizens have found it necessary to sue their governments for violating those constitutional responsibilities.

And two thirds of these cases have been successful!

But time after time, we've watched state governments fail to adhere to court-ordered mandates to provide educational opportunity.

So for students and families, what good is a constitution if its words are merely lofty rhetoric and its promises are hollow?

When it comes to ensuring equitable opportunities for students across this country, our government has policy duplicity!

Our federal and state governments have failed to ensure that the patchwork quilt of laws and lawsuits actually guarantee equity of opportunity for every child.

Even the most successful equity lawsuit—the Abbott case in New Jersey—is now being undermined by Governor Chris Christie’s severe cutbacks in education funding.

NJEA [the New Jersey Education Association] fought hard to obtain the Abbott decision -- And they won!
Oh, NJEA can tell you all about the lessons of Abbott – they’ll be the first ones to tell you that when you close opportunity gaps, you begin to close achievement gaps!

Greater investments in education, greater support to under-served students, greater results. It’s commonsense! It’s a no-brainer!

According to the renowned education expert, Linda Darling-Hammond, we know that there are four main inequities that impact educational success: inequitable distribution of money to schools; inequitable access to a rich, high-quality, 21st century curriculum; inequitable distribution of high-quality teachers and teaching; and childhood poverty that limits access to early learning, healthcare and good nutrition.

These factors were reiterated this February by the Commission on Equity and Excellence.

Our president, Dennis Van Roekel, was privileged to receive an appointment to serve on this Commission. And for two years I watched Dennis and our staff member, Donna Harris-Aikens, struggle with fellow Commissioners about how to define and achieve the dual objectives of ensuring equity of opportunity on the one hand AND excellence in our public schools on the other.

It was our president who reminded the entire Commission about the impact that poverty has on student success. In fact, the very first sentence of the report—which sets the tone—is Dennis’s voice and I quote:

“While some young Americans...are getting a truly world-class education, those who attend schools in high poverty neighborhoods are getting an education that more closely approximates schools in developing nations.”

Well, that may seem obvious to us, but let me tell you, it was a fight to get the entire Commission to agree with that very basic truth.

In the end, this diverse group of academics, practitioners, and advocates all concluded what we already know:

Early childhood education matters!
Equitable school funding matters!
Equal access to quality educators matters!
Poverty and income inequality matter!

To me, the Commission report reflects the meaning of the word justice. It promotes both what is right and what is fair for students.

Excellence in our professions is what’s right for students. And equity of opportunity is what’s fair. That’s the definition of “education justice.”

As educators, we know firsthand that equal access alone doesn’t guarantee equity of opportunity. And we also know equal access doesn’t guarantee excellence.

To achieve both isn’t easy, nor is it cheap. And despite what many in the media and the so-called “reform” community say, the two are NOT mutually exclusive.

So my friends, if education justice is our goal, equity of opportunity alone is not enough. As Dennis so passionately described yesterday, it requires excellence as well.

NEA, we’ve never stopped believing in our responsibility to deliver excellence to our students. We’ve just been too afraid to claim the mantle of excellence as ours!

When it comes to excellence, we must define it. We must demand it. We must practice it. We must own it. And we must lead it!

We define it—like the Massachusetts Teachers’ Association defined what a great teacher evaluation system should look like.

We demand it—like our ESPs [education support professionals] in LaPorte, Indiana who demanded monthly professional development to keep students safe.

We practice it—like our local in Denver, Colorado, that has established a top-notch residency program, so new educators are prepared for the classroom.

We own it—like our local in Columbus, Ohio, that established a nationally renowned peer assistance and review program to provide support and demand the best.

We lead it—like our members in Sun Prairie, Wisconsin, that created a phenomenal mentoring program so that educators get the coaching they need to master their craft.

Excellence....every educator....every day....for every student.

But sisters and brothers, our responsibility as professionals doesn't stop there.

The hard edges of our economy and the absence of adequate protections for our kids has become a norm this country simply cannot afford.

The percentage of children living in low-income families has risen from 40 percent before the financial meltdown to 45 percent in 2012. Let me say that again, nearly half of America's children are growing up in low-income families and 20 percent are living in deep poverty. In America, 42 percent of kids born into poverty stay in poverty.

The income gap in this country has never been wider, which means that the opportunity gap has never been more severe.

It's immoral to sentence children to a lifetime of poverty. It contradicts our American values.

Those who favor market-based solutions to all of America's problems seem comfortable accepting abject poverty and gross income inequality as normal byproducts of our economic system.

Case in point: I don't see Michelle Rhee or the Walton family or the Koch Brothers rushing to the aid of poor American families to close the opportunity gaps in this country.

But sisters and brothers, we must keep the faith. As Dr. King once said, "the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends towards justice."

So, every time there's a fight about investments in education, we need to stand up for more funding AND fair funding. Every time there's a fight about income inequality, we need to stand up and fight for our students AND their families. That's our responsibility. That's our calling.

I've seen so many of you answer that calling in so many ways—from individual acts of charity in school buildings to legislative victories that impact entire states.

When our members along the south Texas border set up a clothing closet of school uniforms for poor families, they raised their hands for education opportunity! Texas, raise your hand!

When our ESP members in Knox County, Kentucky send home backpacks of food every night for their students, they raise their hands for education opportunity! Kentucky, raise your hand!

When our members in California stood beside Governor Jerry Brown to pass one of the most historic school funding packages, they raised their hands for education opportunity! California, raise your hand!

Now, I know that wasn't easy. And my goodness it wasn't cheap.

But NEA members, I see you turning the generosity and passion that's in each of your hearts into collective action for your students. That's the power of organizing! And organizing is what we must do!

But sisters and brothers, I believe we are defined as much by what we stand for as what we fight against.

And like our founding fathers, they declared their independence, they wrote their governing articles, and they adopted their Bill of Rights.

So, on this 4th of July, we must be courageous enough to declare our independence!

Independence from the ignorant politicians who can't seem to understand that learning is more than testing!

Independence from those who equate testing with teaching!

And independence from those who can't see that a student is more than a test score !

When our members in Seattle refused to administer a harmful test, they declared their independence !

We need to declare our independence from privateers who want to turn public education into another industry for profit! We want to democratize opportunity, not commoditize it!

So for all the “privateers” and “profiteers” who are peddling their false promises, you mark my words: there’s a rising tide of resistance out there.

Americans are smarter than you think—we see through your snake-oil sales pitch! And we’re going to organize, organize, organize to send you packing!

Sisters and brothers, public education is a public good that should be safe-guarded as a sacred trust.

The opportunity to receive a world-class education shouldn’t just exist in the same neighborhoods who already have it or for those who can buy it.

Opportunity is part of our social contract. And equal opportunity is the foundation of democracy. We need to demand that our lawmakers hold that ideal sacrosanct.

Look at Governor Corbett in Pennsylvania. He made deep cuts in education funding, laid off thousands of educators, and watched some educators work for free in bankrupt school districts. Yet somehow he found the money to build a brand new prison!

Did he think we wouldn’t notice? Does he think families won’t care? I think Governor Corbett needs a taste of education justice.

I am so tired of the false dichotomy that is perpetuated by the so-called “reformers” and the media. I’m tired of the same old question: is it poverty or is it teacher quality that makes the biggest difference in a student’s achievement? Is it about opportunities or is it about excellence?

Well ladies and gentlemen, here’s the answer: It’s both!

Friends, we can’t be afraid anymore. We can’t be afraid to call out bad actors and bad ideas. And we can’t be afraid to call each other out when we’re not doing whatever it takes.

The guiding light of our American self-governance is found in the articles of our Constitution. We revere them; we choose to abide by them.

Well NEA members, we too have articles. They are the articles of excellence found in our mission, vision, and core values. We must honor them and relentlessly pursue them.

And to those who doubt our sincerity, let me be clear about what we believe:

We believe in closing opportunity gaps AND excellence gaps.

We believe that educators should be of the highest quality. Period. From preK to higher ed—no exceptions.

We believe that accomplished teachers should define what quality teaching looks like and how it should be measured.

We believe that teachers should be evaluated using multiple measures, not a single test score.

We believe that education support professionals are every bit as much a contributor to student success as teachers.

We believe that every single educator must be culturally competent—understanding, respecting, and embracing every student’s unique and beautiful story.

I commend Dennis, Lily, and Becky for leading our professions. This union can and should become the place where education professionals look to improve their practice, their knowledge, and their skills. You are leading a movement that will harness the amazing talent and expertise of our own members to lift up their practice and lift up the hopes of our students.

But our declaration of independence and our articles of excellence are not complete without a Bill of Rights.

I agree with Peter Cookson. Students in America need their own Bill of Rights—a Bill of Rights that guarantees the right of every student to attend a well-funded, safe, 21st century school. One that honors each students’ differences and their individual needs. One that delivers an engaging, world-class curriculum through world-class instruction. One that fairly assesses each student’s learning and each educator’s performance. And one that is led by educational leaders who put students’ needs in the center of every decision.

The American family is made so much richer and vibrant when every child has a chance, when every family can enjoy the American Dream.

NEA, we help build those dreams—in our schools, on our buses, in our lecture halls.

We educate America!
We hold the keys to excellence and opportunity.
We hold the cradle of innovation and ingenuity in our hands.
They’re our students. They’re our future.
NEA, our country needs us. Our students need us.
On this 4th of July, let’s declare our independence!
Let’s organize for our students!
Let’s stand up for our professions!
Let’s work for education justice!
Thank you, NEA!

Here's a summary of the changes we'll ask Armour about.

1. Last line changed on screen and in the voice over to be "If John McCain doesn't understand our problems, how can he fix it?"
2. Add the date and location to each quote.
3. I would recommend adding the citation onto the health care costs up 78%. Would be Kaiser Family Foundation.
4. Psychological. We'll have to talk to Mark and see if there's a way to add in the context of the quote: "It's psychological. It's psychological, because I believe the fundamentals of our economy is still strong." The problem is time - the context adds about 4 seconds so we'll likely have to lose something.

Do these changes work for everyone?

Subject: An announcement on my future plans

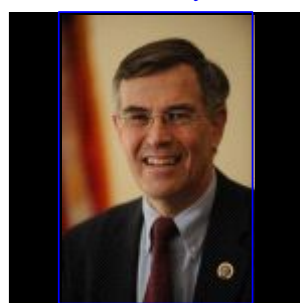

You may have been wondering what I would do after leaving Congress. Until now I have been wondering. This morning the American Association for the Advancement of Science announced that starting in February I will be the CEO and Executive Publisher of the Science family of journals. It is a great organization, with a distinguished past, an important future, and very talented people. I am very excited.

Looking forward to talking with you about this and other things,

Rush

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

November 18, 2014

Retiring U.S. Congressman Rush D. Holt, Ph.D., a Scientist and Teacher, to Lead AAAS, the World's Largest General Scientific Society—Publisher of the Science Family of Journals

Congressman Rush D. Holt, Ph.D., who will retire from the U.S. House of Representatives at the end of his eighth term, has agreed to join the world's largest general scientific organization, the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), as chief executive officer and executive publisher of the Science family of journals.

He will succeed Alan I. Leshner, Ph.D., who had previously announced that he would be stepping down as AAAS CEO.

Holt, a research physicist and former teacher, will serve as the 18th chief executive of the 166-year-old non-profit, non-partisan AAAS after his legislative term ends, during the association's 2015 Annual Meeting, February 12-16, in San Jose, Ca.

Efforts to advance science, promote public engagement with science and technology, and ensure that accurate scientific information informs policy decisions—core AAAS activities—have also been central to Holt's long record of public service. Under its mission, AAAS seeks to “advance science, engineering, and innovation throughout the world for the benefit of all people.” The association fulfills that mandate through global science diplomacy; programs to expand and diversify the science and technology workforce; authoritative analysis intended to guide U.S. science policy; and science-education reform activities.

As examples, Project 2061 at AAAS works to help all Americans become more literate in science, mathematics, and technology, while another respected program provides policymakers with objective assessments of federal research and development funding trends. Annual AAAS Family Science Days encourage thousands of young people to take part in hands-on science-learning activities, and to learn about “cool jobs” in science. The association's Mass Media Science and Engineering Fellowships program has been placing scientists and engineers in newsrooms for the past 40 years, and AAAS satellite-image analysis leverages science in service of human rights. These and an array of other programs allow AAAS to “advance science and serve society.”

Alan I. Leshner has served as the association's CEO and executive publisher since December 2001. In April, Leshner, a long-time advocate of science communication, international research cooperation, and dynamic interaction between scientists and the public, had announced his plan to retire, after 13 years of service to AAAS.

"Rush Holt will be a great leader of AAAS and a powerful spokesman for science both nationally and internationally," said Phillip A. Sharp, chair of the AAAS Board of Directors, who serves as an Institute Professor at the Koch Institute for Integrative Cancer Research, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "His career as a scientist, educator, and public servant, uniquely prepares him to take the reins of AAAS from another great leader, Alan Leshner."

Holt, 66, has represented Central New Jersey (12th District) in Congress since 1999. He earned his B.A. degree in physics from Carleton College in Minnesota, and he completed his Master's and doctoral degrees at New York University. In 1982-83, while he was teaching physics and public policy at Swarthmore College, Holt was selected by the American Physical Society to receive a highly competitive AAAS Science & Technology Policy Fellowship. The 42-year-old Fellowships program, which places outstanding scientists and engineers in executive, legislative, and Congressional branch assignments for one or two years, now includes nearly 3,000 alumni working worldwide in the policy, academic, industry, and nonprofit realms. Holt has said that his AAAS S&T Policy Fellowship was "life changing," and served as a springboard to his role in Congress.

"AAAS, as one of the world's most respected non-profit, non-partisan organizations and publisher of the leading Science family of journals, helps to promote scientific progress and to improve human welfare," Holt said regarding his acceptance of the leadership role at AAAS. "I look forward to supporting the association's mission to advance science, engineering, and innovation throughout the world, for the benefit of all people."

AAAS Board member Laura H. Greene, the Swanlund Professor of Physics at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, described Holt as an effective advocate for the importance of science to society: "Rush Holt has long been a champion of a broad spectrum of scientific research areas, and of education," she said. "He very effectively communicates with the public and policy makers, and he brings exciting new ideas to the table. Those abilities will help AAAS to achieve an even greater role in supporting international scientific collaborations and advances."

On Capitol Hill, Holt has established a long track record of advocacy for federal investment in research and development, science education, and innovation. "We have to invest in this country—private sector and public sector—in research," Holt told a reporter after famously beating the IBM supercomputer Watson in a "Jeopardy!" exhibition game intended to promote innovation. "We're under-investing [in research], and we're under-investing in science education." Holt has also broadly promoted the value of science communication, particularly for conveying information about climate change, and he has said that "thinking like a scientist" can benefit the policymaking process.

Over the course of his career, Holt has held positions as a teacher and as an arms control expert at the U.S. State Department. From 1989 until 1998, he served as Assistant Director of the Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory, the largest research facility of Princeton University. As a result of his alternative-energy research, Holt in 1981 was issued a patent on an improved solar-pond technology for harnessing energy from sunlight.

Holt's science- and education-related roles in Congress have included service with the Committee on Education and the Workforce; the Committee on Natural Resources; and the National Commission on Mathematics and Science Teaching for the 21st Century. He serves as co-chair of the Research and Development Caucus, and he sits on other caucuses related to children's environmental health, renewable energy, sustainable development, Alzheimer's and diabetes disease research, biomedical research more broadly, the Internet, community colleges, and more. He is a recipient of the Champion of Science Award from the nonprofit Science Coalition, a group of more than 50 leading public and private research universities.

Oversight of a far-reaching transformation initiative and the 2015 launch of a new open-access journal, Science Advances—efforts set forth by the AAAS Board of Directors—will be among Holt's first responsibilities as the new CEO of AAAS. The transformation initiative, based on long-range strategic planning and research, will build on the association's strengths by enhancing its engagement with its members and by positioning the Science family of journals—including Science Signaling, and Science Translational Medicine—to provide continued leadership in science communication.

Leshner, whose career has spanned contributions as a neuroscientist, psychologist, and science administrator, succeeded Richard S. Nicholson, the association's executive officer from 1989 until 2001. In addition to promoting the transformation initiative and the launch of Science Advances, Leshner worked broadly to ensure that scientific advances would serve society. That goal was achieved through leadership to further international research cooperation and science diplomacy; and by establishing the AAAS Center for Public Engagement with Science and Technology, which gave rise to AAAS Family Science Days as well as a series of popular Communicating Science workshops. He also spoke up for science through Congressional testimony, op-ed articles, and media interviews. Leshner consistently focused on issues at the intersection of science and society—from climate change and the teaching of evolution, to the importance of federal funding for basic research—and he pushed for what he described as “more open and honest bidirectional dialogue about science and technology and their products, including not only their benefits, but also their limits, perils, and pitfalls.” Ideology, Leshner often said, must never “trump” scientific advancement.

Board Chair Sharp commended Leshner’s service to AAAS: “Alan has been a fabulous leader,” Sharp said. “He has advanced science at every level of society, all the way from Main Street, to grade-school and high-school students, to public and global forums. We wish him great success in his next phase of life.”

Leshner commended Holt’s selection to serve as AAAS CEO. “Rush Holt is an ideal choice to lead AAAS and Science into the future,” Leshner said. “His expertise, experience, and commitment to science, and to public service are sure to greatly enhance the association’s impact in all domains.”

The American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) is the world’s largest general scientific society and publisher of the journal Science (www.sciencemag.org) as well as Science Translational Medicine (www.sciencetranslationalmedicine.org) and Science Signaling (www.sciencesignaling.org). AAAS was founded in 1848 and includes some 264 affiliated societies and academies of science, serving 10 million individuals. Science has the largest paid circulation of any peer-reviewed general science journal in the world, with an estimated total readership of 1 million. The non-profit AAAS (www.aaas.org) is open to all and fulfills its mission to “advance science and serve society” through initiatives in science policy, international programs, science education, public engagement, and more. Hi John -

Hope that you are well. I will try and keep this as brief as possible.

I have been approached by several former staffers of the National Security Network who are concerned that the existing infrastructure on the progressive side to defend progressives and HRC on national security policy this cycle is not anything like the capabilities that existed in the 2008 cycle. And it is a crucial weakness as it looks as if the GOP will be emphasizing national security and whatever their recent stumbles on Iraq, they can't be underestimated given the state of the world. I agree with them.

Richard Fontaine told one former NSN staffer when he joined CNAS that NSN was the biggest pain in the ass during the McCain campaign. Fontaine said every time they made a statement on foreign policy, minutes later NSN would issue a press release about why it was stupid.

NSN doesn't do that kind of work anymore as by necessity it has evolved into much more of a policy-oriented shop over the last eight years as it has received more foundation funding. Truman never did that. And CAP and ThinkProgress are certainly in this space and did good work in 2008 and likely will again, but we're not focused on this aspect 100% of the time.

We think that it is necessary to rebuild this capability. It can be a part of the existing structure of outside groups supporting HRC or it could be its own free-standing group. I know of at least four people who would be interested in participating in this effort, including myself.

Please let me know if you think this is a worthwhile idea.

My best,
Ken

Hi John (and Eryn),
I have our tickets for the dinner Saturday. I think easiest thing is to meet at the WSJ reception and I can give you your ticket then. It's in the Kalorama Room on the lobby level. Print the attached invitation out so you can get past security.
FYI, our dinner table includes Joel Benenson, David Plouffe, Ben Rhodes—plus, for partisan balance, I guess, GOP talking head/former consultant Ana Navarro. Also from the Journal there will be Jerry Seib and Beth Reinhard, who covers Jeb Bush and the Republican side.
My cell is 202-446-4530 if you have any trouble, which I somehow doubt. What's your cell?
All best,
Laura

p.s. Eryn- are these still the best email addresses for both of you?

Subject: Network Outages - Oct 7th and Oct 12th

Dear Law Center community,

The IST department has been making improvements to the speed and reliability of the Law Center’s connection to the Internet. During the announced outage on Wednesday, Oct. 7th (see reprint of original notification below), new equipment was implemented. Due to unforeseen complications with this implementation, the Law Center lost connectivity to the Internet on Friday, Oct 9th from 11:30 am to 12:05 pm and Internet connectivity on the wireless network on Monday, October 12th from 11:00 am to 1:30 pm. These complications have been corrected and the Law Center network is now stable. We do not expect any further interruptions in service. We apologize for the inconvenience and appreciate your patience as we improve the quality of the network at the Law Center.

*****

Dear Law Center community,

The next step in our network infrastructure upgrade will require a network outage starting at 11:00PM on Wednesday, Oct 7th and ending by 12:00AM Thursday, Oct 8th . This outage will only effect on-campus access to resources. If you experience network connectivity issues after this time, please contact the IST Service Desk at 202-662-9284 or help@law.georgetown.edu .

my last blast from my assignment as member of SDG panel:

SDG UNGA meeting will be kicked off by Pope Francis on Friday 9/25 and last through the weekend until 9/27. I think POTUS isn't up there till evening of 9/27 or 9/28. What about doing an op-Ed from POTUS timed for the weekend that lifts up SDG's and the idea that we can end extreme poverty by 2030, if countries pay attention to gender equity, governance, peace and security, etc. I could send an outline if there is any appetite.

Hi, Jason,

Hoping you had a good Thanksgiving. We strongly support the WH announcement that the Prez will veto the proposed tax extender deal because it provides permanent breaks for corporations while neglecting working families.

Confidentially (though you may know this from other sources): Reid's case for this deal hinges substantially on his claim that the Prez will ultimately cave on EITC and CTC improvement extensions in 2015, so we're better off to move ahead with his deal now. Our hand would be stronger if the President made an explicit statement that he will veto any tax plan that extends or makes permanent other corporate tax breaks without extending the CTC and EITC improvements for the same period. Can that be made to happen? It even seems conceivable, based on my conversations, that such a statement would get Reid to back off. Happy to give a bit more info by phone.

FYI, we're bringing 20 of our members to town Tues and Wed. Groups of 8-10 of them will meet separately with Senators Murray, Bennet, Schatz, Wyden, Stabenow, Nelson, Markey, Reed, Cantwell, and likely Blumenthal, as well as with Feinsteins COS. We expect that a major goal of the meetings will be getting the Senators to oppose any deal that would make any tax extenders permanent without also making the CTC and EITC improvements permanent.

Statement by NSC Spokesperson Ned Price on Assistant to the President for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism Lisa Monaco's Meeting with Indian Deputy National Security Advisor Dr. Arvind Gupta

Assistant to the President for Homeland Security and Counterterrorism, Lisa Monaco, met with Indian Deputy National Security Advisor Dr. Arvind Gupta in conjunction with the United States-India Cyber Dialogue. The leaders discussed a wide range of issues including cybersecurity, enhanced law enforcement cooperation, and U.S.-India collaboration against Lashkar-e-Tayyiba and other terrorist threats. Building on the commitment that President Obama and Prime Minister Modi made in New Delhi in January to make the U.S.-India partnership "a defining counterterrorism relationship for the 21st Century," they agreed to deepen their already close collaboration on these issues.

Subject: HRC @ Toner Prize

All, here are draft remarks for the Toner Prize event on Monday evening.

We had talked about a few possible goals for this speech: 1) clear the air a bit with the press, possibly with self-deprecating humor; 2) explain the important role that serious, fact-based journalism plays in our democracy, as opposed to gotcha-style politics of personal destruction; 3) and play a little offense on health care given that Monday is the 5-year anniversary of the ACA.

Of these sections, the first one is where I could really use your input. Do the jokes in here work? Do you have suggestions for punching any of them up? Robin's husband Peter likes the idea of HRC being funny up there, and she says she is open to it as well, but we'll have to see if she really goes for it.

Thanks

Dan

John --

We're trying to get the word out about Paul Ryan's plan to end Medicare. That's why we're hoping to give out 100,000 "Save Medicare, Vote Democrat" bumper stickers.

Voters need to know that if Mitt Romney, Paul Ryan, and the Republicans win in November, you can kiss Medicare goodbye.

Important Information

- Tickets are non-transferrable.
- Changes to your itinerary may affect your fare.
- Refund and exchange restrictions and penalties for failure to cancel unwanted travel may apply. If your travel plans change, call us before departure to change your reservation. If you do not board your train, your entire reservation from that point will be canceled. If you board a different train without notifying us, you will have to pay for it separately; the conductor cannot apply the money paid for your prior reservation. For all travel on or after March 1, 2014, for most Acela Express Business class reservations and Reserved Coach class reservations, you must cancel your reservation at least 24 hours prior to the train's departure in order to be eligible for a full refund. If the reservation is canceled within 24 hours of departure, a refund fee will apply. If the reservation is not canceled prior to scheduled departure ("no show"), the entire amount paid for the reservation will be forfeited. See the refund/exchange policy at Amtrak.com/refund.
- Summary of Conditions of Contract: Ticket valid for carriage or refund (subject to the refund rules of the fare purchased) for twelve months after date of issue unless otherwise specified. Amtrak tickets may only be sold or issued by Amtrak or an authorized travel agent/tour operator. Tickets sold or issued by an unauthorized third party will be voided by Amtrak. This ticket is a contract of carriage between Amtrak and the ticket holder, which is subject to specific terms and conditions, which are available for inspection at Amtrak ticket counters, on the Amtrak website at Amtrak.com/conditionsofcontract , or by calling 1-800-USA-RAIL. Tickets sold for non-Amtrak service are subject to the tariffs of the providing carrier.

- Questions? Contact us online at Amtrak.com/contact or call 1-800-USA-RAIL (1-800-872-7245) or TDD/TTY (1-800-523-6590).

Subject: RE: India Saga

I propose shortening the statement as follows.

"As an Indian-American who has lived in this country since the age of four, serving on the Obama-Biden transition team is a uniquely great privilege for me. A presidential transition is always a time of excitement and, in some cases, of rumors and unfounded gossip. I'd like to set to rest a few baseless reports that have been circulating on the Internet. First, my personal politics have nothing in common with the views espoused by the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP), the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), or any such organization. I've never been involved in Indian politics, and never intend to do so. Second, I've always condemned any politics of division, of ethnic or religious hatred, of violence and intimidation as a political tool. Some Internet rumors have attempted to link me to Hindu Nationalist groups through a variety of tenuous connections: Relief work I'm proud to have helped coordinate following the Gujarati earthquake of 2001, or cultural and religious affiliations of some of my family members, or apolitical humanitarian work I've been privileged to do as a founder of the NGO Indicorps and as the Director of Global Development for Google.org. Finally, I do not subscribe to the views of such Hindu nationalist groups, and never have. We saw too much guilt by association during the presidential campaign-- and we saw such tactics decisively repudiated by the American people. I am delighted with what the victory on November 4 says about my country, and about our place in the world. I look forward to serving our President-elect in this time of transition."

Subject: RE: India Saga

My apologies, I sent the wrong one...

"As an Indian-American who has lived in this country since the age of four, serving in the Obama-Biden campaign (and now the Obama-Biden transition team) is a uniquely great honor for me. I am proud of my service as an official of the United States government through two Administrations, working in Bosnia, Kosovo, Southeast Asia, Africa and Eastern Europe-- but I believe that the election of Barack Obama represents a sea-change in relations between America and the global community. I'm proud of my involvement in the campaign and transition-- not just for myself, but also for what my selection says about the Indian-American community. This campaign has truly sought out the voices and talents of South Asian Americans in a way never before seen-- and I have every expectation that this attitude will be carried over to the new Administration.

"A presidential transition is always a time of wild rumors and unfounded gossip, so I'd like to set to rest a few baseless reports that have been circulating on the Internet:

--First, I've never been affiliated-- in any way, shape or form-- with any Indian political party or similar group. To clear up one false rumor: I've never been affiliated with the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS), or any such organization. I've never been involved in Indian politics, and never intend to do so.

--Second, my personal politics have nothing in common with the views espoused by such groups. I've always condemned any politics of division, of ethnic or religious hatred, of violence and intimidation as a political tool. That's why I've devoted so much of the past two years to the candidacy of a figure who truly does represent my personal political views: Barack Obama.

--Third, some Internet rumors have attempted to link me to Hindu Nationalist groups through a variety of tenuous connections: Relief work I'm proud to have helped coordinate following the Gujarati earthquake of 2001, or cultural and religious affiliations of some of my family members, or apolitical humanitarian work I've been privileged to do as a founder of the NGO Indicorps and as the Director of Global Development for Google.org. I have no ties to any such groups, and never have. We saw too much guilt by association during the presidential campaign-- and we saw such tactics decisively repudiated by the American people.

"I am delighted with what the victory on November 4 says about my country, and about our place in the world. For too long, Americans of South Asian descent have been made to feel as if we can't be proudly desi yet fully American. For too long, we've had to ask ourselves whether we can overcome this unfair and baseless exclusion. Last Tuesday-- to my enormous pride and satisfaction-- America gave its reply: Yes, We Can!."

Denis, Chris and Dan: I am writing to get some guidance from you in managing the India press frenzy about my alleged right wing politics and terrorist tendencies. Denis since we last talked the stories have multiplied and gotten nastier, feeding on each other.
Issue:

There stories are in the Indian press, in general US and South Asia/US related blogs. In sum, they are accusing me of being a right wing Hindu fundamentalist and supporting the communal violence in Gujarat. See some of the articles below - the rest are more of the same. I generally would not worry about this stuff (they tried this before) except due to my position, it has gotten more intense and frankly crazy. There are hundered of blog posts and articles on this and without any responses, the rumors are feeding on each other. More interestingly, they were planning a public campaign to embarras the President-elect and have me resign. I had several calls from prominent folks in India saying the best way to counter the lies and rumors was to put something out there denying the allegations. Others suggested doing a controlled interview.

Options:

There are several options of what I could do:

- 1) continue to ignore
- 2) write a strongly worded statement clearly stating my position
- 3) do a controlled interview

Next Steps:

I would like to get your guidance on how to proceed with this. Personally think option 2 will put it to rest, but have less experiance with this stuff. I suggest to get this done today, so we can get into the India news cycles for tomorrow and the let the surrogates (who are fully prepared to do) take over from there.

Thanks!
Sonal

World's First Green Island...

Thank you for posting "Paris is Just The Beginning...". Please note that I'm helping two companies (Astronergy and Solar Blue), who have come together in an effort to bring solar mega farms to Puerto Rico. The goal is to transform Puerto Rico into the world's first "Green Island". The necessary due diligence has taken place over the past 3 years.

I'm happy to hear that Hillary's vision is in line with Bill Gates goals and objectives as articulated in his paper entitled "Energy Innovation Why We Need It and How to Get It".

Thank you.

YOUR RETIREMENT SAVINGS PROGRESS REPORT

Make sure you're on track. Talk with a Fidelity Workplace Planning and Guidance Consultant today at 866-715-5959.

To stay on track for retirement, it's important to understand how you're saving and investing. Fidelity is here to help make that process easier. Below is an analysis of your assets held at Fidelity in your workplace savings plan.

Privacy Policy

| Terms of Use

Keep in mind that investing involves risk. The value of your investment will fluctuate over time, and you may gain or lose money.

Income Simulator is an educational tool.

Asset allocation does not ensure a profit or guarantee against loss.

"Savings" includes employee and employer contributions. Employee contribution rates are as of September 17, 2014, and employer contributions are based on the last 12 months up to that date and include matching and profit sharing contributions. The analysis treats all contributions as pretax. For participants whose contributions are limited, e.g., 402(g), 415, or compensation limit, the Indicator may have limited applicability.

We believe that 10% is a good guideline for a minimum savings rate when pension incomes are unknown, based on our experience with participants' financial plans. However, our research shows that most participants need to have a total pretax savings rate (including employer contributions) of 15%, from an assumed starting age of 25 through an assumed retirement age of 67, to replace 45% of final pay from retirement savings (assuming no pension income); individual participants may need to save more or less than 15% depending on retirement age, desired retirement lifestyle, assets saved to date, and other factors. You will receive the "On Track" message if your total pretax savings rate is 15% or more, the "May Need Attention" message if your total pretax savings rate is 10.00%-14.99%, and the "Needs Attention" message if your total pretax savings rate is less than 10%. Participants making Roth 401(k) contributions may have lower minimum savings rates. For example, someone in the 25% tax bracket making a 12% pretax contribution could instead make a 9% Roth 401(k) contribution and for purposes of this metric would then be considered "off plan."

For "investment mix" purposes, the participant's current age and equity holdings are compared with an example table containing age-based equity holding percentages based on an equity glide path as of August 29, 2014. The Fidelity Equity Glide Path is an example we use for this measure and is a range of equity allocations that may be generally appropriate for many investors saving for retirement and planning to retire around ages 65 to 67. It is designed to become more conservative as participants approach retirement and beyond. The glide path as of December 31, 2013, begins with 90% equity holdings within a retirement portfolio at age 25, continuing down to 24% equity holdings at age 93. Equities are defined as domestic equity, international equity, company stock, and the equity option of blended investment options. If you have more than 80% of your total balance in target date funds, you will receive the "On Track" message. If you have less than 80% of your total balance in target date funds, you will receive the "On Track" message if equity holdings are within 10% of what the equity glide path would suggest, the "May Need Attention" message if equity holdings are within 10%-25% of what the equity glide path would suggest, and the "Needs Attention" message if equity holdings are more than 25% off from what the equity glide path would suggest and is capped at 95% equity. The analysis does not take into consideration other workplace savings plan accounts, BrokerageLink® assets, or other investments you may hold with Fidelity or elsewhere. It also does not consider other factors, such as risk tolerance, that may affect your retirement mix decision. Any assets held in managed accounts are excluded from this analysis.

* This hypothetical example of a needed savings multiple for someone near your age assumes the following: a retirement age of 67, a retirement expense based on an 85% replacement rate of after-tax preretirement income, a retirement planning age of 92, and a systematic withdrawal of savings in retirement. The savings multiples assume income from Social Security retirement benefits. No pension benefit is assumed. Social Security full retirement age is 67 for workers born in 1960 or later. For purposes of this analysis, Fidelity utilized a hypothetical flat rate of return of 5.5% annually with respect to account growth. Inflation is assumed to be 2.3%, meaning real (inflation-adjusted) return is assumed to be 3.2%. Analysis is based on a hypothetical worker making $40,000 a year at age 25, whose salary is growing at a real annual wage increase of 1.5%, and a corresponding ending salary at age 67 of approximately $72,000 (in today's dollars). The Social Security benefit is estimated at about $1,920 per month. Fidelity also assumes that the participant took no loans or hardship withdrawals from his or her workplace plan and assumes no breaks in service and no breaks in contributions from ages 25 to 67. The maximum IRS annual qualified retirement plan contribution limit in 2014 is $17,500.

Hi all,

The Travel Team is compiling a list of supporters in NYC and around the country ready to help the campaign with travel-related resources. We are looking for volunteer drivers, volunteer vehicles (e.g. a vehicle we can use and someone else can drive) and supporter housing. Please use THIS form to suggest people in your network of family and friends who would be interested in helping. This support is pivotal to our success and we appreciate everyone who is able to contribute.

Also, the travel team is in need of additional volunteer drivers in the NYC area- if your interns are able to drive, please let us know. These volunteer drivers are saving huge costs to the campaign and we appreciate any time they are able to give.

Thank you in advance for your help,

The Travel Team

Message from Charles

Reentering the new academic year can be a delicate balancing act. Although exciting, so many conflicting priorities can be challenging to manage. Sometimes we forget to stop and breathe, we put our own self-care on the back burner and mindlessly forge ahead. For 2015-16, I invite you to try a different approach. This year, many of our GUWellness activities, programming and workshops are designed to compliment each other so that we deepen our community's journey of living a mindful and compassionate WHOLE life. Try it. Who knows? You might love it. Need some inspiration? Listen to my first-ever podcast interview with SFS Professor David Edelstein . In the last few years, he's taken wellness to a whole new level but I think that there are some basic principles that we can all embrace. Don't forget: check out <http://wellness.georgetown.edu> for more information about being well at GU!

Whether you Walk America or Walk with Charles...just walk.

Taking the Leap Forward: Imagining your life after retirement

We often focus on preparing ourselves financially for retirement. But what about emotionally, socially, spiritually?

You are invited to join Georgetown alumna (B'92) and founder of Heart's Joy Consulting, Jan Hice, for Taking the Leap Forward: Imagining Your Life After Retirement, a four-part workshop series being offered free-of-charge to our faculty and staff. In-person sessions will be held 10:30a - 12:30p in M-31 Darnall Hall on Friday October 2, 9, 16 & 23.

This is not a financial planning seminar. Participants can expect to gain an awareness of the transition process and be engaged in imagining their future after retirement. We will address the emotion(s) that comes up in transition and the alignment required to create the life you've imagined. Knowing that it takes time and support to build a habit, the program includes two 60-minute conference calls to check-in with participants at two-week intervals within the first 30 days after the program completes. At the end of this series, you can expect to leave with a vision for this next phase of life and actionable steps to achieve it. Space is limited. Register today.

Need some retirement planning help?
Schedule a one-on-one with TIAA-CREF, Fidelity or Vanguard

Whether you're looking to create a savings strategy for retirement (or other major life events), understand your investment choices, learn about how to protect your assets against inflation or just want to review your current investment allocations - it may be time to schedule your free consultation with a representative from one of our retirement investment companies.

Indoor Bicycle Parking Encourages Active Commuting

Over the summer, the SFS Dean's Office installed two indoor bicycle racks in its suite using funds awarded by the GU Sustainable Campus Fund. This new amenity, in addition to our existing commuter shower, has made it easier for our staff members to adopt active and environmentally-friendly commuting practices. Halley Lisuk, Business Manager for the Dean's Office, explains how the new racks help her enjoy a more active commute: "After biking in from Falls Church it's great to not have to worry about finding a place on campus that is secure and covered for my bike. I feel like it's the equivalent of having a garage for your car at home or a reserved parking spot at work. You don't have to think about taking the time to find a spot or worry that you'll have to circle the block multiple times in hopes of finding a place to put your bike. It certainly motivates me to ride in more frequently and takes away one more excuse not to do so." The SFS Dean's Office is proud to be the first (but hopefully not the last!) office on the main campus to provide secure, convenient, indoor bicycle parking available to its staff members. ~Submitted by

I think we can definitely get the first answered. I will make sure to flag.
The second is a good question I will raise. The rationale section starts with groups which I think is really important. The first survey is really meant to be a lay of the land--what are people's fav/unfavs, right track/wrong track, initial head to head, etc. Very basic. Then the online panel is supposed to provide some qualitative to underpin that. We also have the qualitative Garin already did. But that may not be the right way to go and I'll ask the pollsters about that. Like I said, I'm certain the plan will change--I am many things, but a pollster is not one!

I am in favor of getting going along the lines outlined. One track I think we should explore is whether and how attacks from the right strengthen and immunize her on the left. Another question I have is whether qualitative is being used enough to inform the early quantitative research.

Dear Robby

I look forward to reviewing and sharing any thoughts that may be valuable.

My one thought from the conversation I participated in with Wendy is that her strength is in branding and marketing, using the evidence base in determining how to generate the behaviors sought in the target audience. So I think she has the capacity and creativity to drive the brand development and strategy from inception to execution. I imagine she would rely on the data that is being collected through the polling and focus groups you outline but equally as important, would likely have questions she might suggest specifically be included in the process. That's why I'm not sure she is an advisor in the sense of opining on things as they occur but instead an actual partner with the team in defining and shaping what information is needed and then how to synthesize it for the purposes at hand.

This may make more sense once you meet her and have a thoughtful conversation about her strengths and talents. Then I think her active engagement can be efficient and productive for the activity you have outlined. Should we arrange a time for you to meet her or at least connect with her by telephone?

best.

Madame Secretary, Cheryl, John,

Attached is an updated summary of the research process and a budget. I want to emphasize that THIS WILL CHANGE because the team will have better ideas on methodology and the strategy will evolve as the project progresses. I would still assume our budget will be in the $2+ million range per my earlier memo, even though the attached budget is lower than $2 million (obviously, we are going to make this as cheap as we can without sacrificing thoroughness and quality).

Below is information on the participants. Attached is (1) a revised overview of the process and (2) a budget.

Please let me know if there are any objections or recommended changes, otherwise I will proceed with the plan as outlined.

Thanks!

THE TEAM:

Pollsters: Jef Pollock and John Anzalone

Media consultant: Saul Shorr (like Jef and John, I will ask that he participate in the project, with no obligation by you or him that he work for the campaign, should you decide to run. I will offer Saul $20k plus travel costs to work with us for the next three months and attend a number of the focus groups).

Advisors: I will have Wendy provide input on the instruments and methodology for the first round--then we can evaluate the degree we want to share data. I would like to talk to her before we lock this in, since I have never met her.

SELF RESEARCH

We don't have a thematically organized set of self research on the your accomplishments pre-State. I would like to give the pollsters full access to all raw materials on accomplishments pre 2009, especially the Senate. It's very important that we come out of this process understanding which accomplishments are most meaningful to voters.

POLICY

I would like to loop Dan and Jake into drafting of likely policy initiatives for testing--they have already provided me some input, but I'd like to get them on calls with the team to drill down on this in more detail, since it's so important. I know that policy is still a nascent process and will be highly iterative, but I don't think it makes sense to do the polling in isolation from the policy work itself (since the research should be supporting and informing the policy development).

DEBBIE FINE - CENTER FOR AMERICAN PROGRESS

Debbie Fine is the Senior Vice President, General Counsel, and Corporate Secretary of the Center for American Progress. Ten years ago, she moved to DC from New York—where she'd been in MoFo's technology transactions group—to join American Progress when the policy institute was very new. She says she wanted to use her legal training to help build a strong, relevant progressive organization. Debbie established the legal department, and says she's proud of how integrated the legal team is in CAP's organizational efforts on issues such as reducing income inequality, expanding healthcare coverage, and protecting the planet. She enjoys being part of a large staff of 300 talented and diverse individuals that pursue a mission based on shared values.

What you didn't know about Debbie:

- Her first job was in eighth grade as a sales person and cashier in an art deco gift shop on Manhattan's Upper West Side.
- She loves going to concerts—preferably indie rock. Her first concert was Dexy's Midnight Runners at the Beacon Theater.
- She is a former White House staffer.
- Walking is her favorite way of getting around the city.

The travel team priced out different options and it was just as cheap for us to drop off the car in DC tomorrow morning as it was to drive it back up to NY. Since I already have a bus ticket back Sunday I decided to just drop it off tomorrow morning.

Dear Trustees,

Some of you may be aware of an incident at Saturday's women's basketball competition at Fontbonne University, which is in Clayton, MO. During the national anthem, a Knox player engaged in a "hands up, don't shoot" protest, falling to the floor and remaining there for approximately 5 minutes.

(The student is a junior, an African American, and active in campus diversity and sexual respect advocacy.)

At the end of that period, she left the court and did not return for the duration of the game. On Monday morning, the coach (Emily Cline) met with the student to learn what she hoped to achieve and to understand more about her intent. Chad was on the phone during the meeting but could not attend in person as he was on the east coast meeting with alums. The student was not responsive to their questions, and as result of this unresponsiveness, along with her decision to leave the team and sit out the game, she was suspended from basketball activities for one game.

On Monday afternoon, the team called a meeting attended by Coach Cline, Dean Behling, Athletics Administrator and Title IX Coordinator Kim Schrader and myself. The meeting was emotional and lasted 3 hours. It became clear that the players were generally in support of the student although most of the team noted that they wished she had told them in advance of her intentions. Over night and in the early morning, the administrators in attendance, together with Chad, made the decision to reverse the suspension and make an announcement. Meanwhile, the matter hit the social media along with numerous similar protests at other institutions and we continued to get calls, mostly from younger alumni and almost unanimously in support of the student. The coach met with the team at 10 this morning and after that meeting, we released this statement to the campus and on social media:

Knox College Statement on Women's Basketball

This past Saturday, a Knox College women's basketball player staged a protest prior to the start of a regulation game in response to the events in Ferguson, Missouri. The player was suspended for one game for leaving the court and sitting out the competition. Upon review of the situation and discussion with the team, and in recognition of the larger national context, the decision was made to reverse the suspension, and the player has been invited to resume all basketball activities. The College deeply appreciates the many viewpoints expressed by the women's basketball team and their thoughtful dialogue as we sought to arrive at a resolution that considered all perspectives.

The student has been interviewed by local media and we are monitoring the various responses by alums and others. Many are calling for a public apology and in consultation with College counsel, we are considering how best to address that call. Chad is on his way back to campus and should arrive tonight. Meanwhile, two more meetings have been scheduled to address the many meanings of these events

: the first meeting will be at 9:30 tomorrow morning with the athletic department staff and the second an open forum for the campus community at 11 am. We are working on an additional statement to the full campus community that will be released after that forum

Since we are not in session, there are very few students on campus at present, but as you all know, it is a volatile time on campuses and in communities. Ferguson is three hours south of Galesburg and for many of our students feels like our back yard. I did address the matter in my convocation speech, and prior to this event, had been planning how to use the MLK Day Convocation for a teach-in on these issues.

We are continuing to plan programming on the issue, including diversity training for faculty and staff as noted in Goal 2 of the strategic plan. I'm happy to answer any questions.

Cantor To Host Job Fair With Employers Stimulated By Over \$50 Million In Recovery Act Funds

House Minority Whip Rep. Eric Cantor (R-VA) has been one of the Recovery Act's most vocal critics. After whipping his caucus into uniformly opposing the stimulus, Cantor has been the lead spokesman decrying the program as a failure. Ignoring evidence that that the stimulus is helping to turn around the economy, Cantor repeatedly says that it is "failing" to "create jobs."

As ThinkProgress reported last year, despite his withering attacks on the stimulus, Cantor hosted two job fairs filled with employers hiring directly because of stimulus grants and programs. Tomorrow, Cantor intends to again host a job fair stimulated by jobs made possible through the Recovery Act:

- Cantor job fair employer AT&T has received two contracts totaling $837,550 from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer Bryant & Stratton College received contracts totaling $209,571 from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer Chesterfield County received grants totaling $406,773 from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer CSX Transportation received grants totaling over $5.7 million from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer Goodwill Industries International has received grants of over $6.4 million from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer Northrop Grumman Corporation has received grants of over $2.6 million from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer University of Richmond has received grants totaling $750,964 from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer Nationwide Insurance has received grants totaling $25,617 from the Recovery Act.
- Cantor job fair employer United Way of Greater Richmond has received a $61,125 grant from the Recovery Act.

According to a ThinkProgress review of contracts from the Recovery.gov website, employers at the Cantor job fair tomorrow have received approximately $52,716,129 from the the stimulus.

While Cantor has tried to score political points slamming the stimulus as an utter failure, he has relied on it as a crutch to bring both private and public sector jobs to his district. Cantor's GOP colleagues — who helped him try to kill the stimulus — have similarly gone back to their district to claim credit for stimulus programs. A ThinkProgress report released on the one year anniversary of the stimulus highlights over half the GOP caucus, 114 lawmakers , who voted to kill the stimulus then took credit for its success.

Dear John,

I will be speaking at Nancy Pelosi's economics conference panel on Tuesday. I have been asked to focus on green stimulus/recovery and infrastructure policies. I wanted to catch up on what the transition team has been planning in this regard so that I can find areas of common ground between the President-elect's team and what the Congress is considering. If there is any information you can share with me I would be delighted to use it to support the new Administration's proposals in my testimony. (I have also sent Carol Browner an email and I will be talking with Sarah at CAP tomorrow.)

Thanks,

Today, the United State Supreme Court announced that next term it will hear the case of Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association, which calls into question the right of public sector to collect a "fair share" fee when it bargains for non-union members. These fees ensure that our public sector unions can continue their fight for fair wages and benefits that teachers, nurses, child care workers, EMTs, and so many others deserve who serve our children and our communities day in and day out. These workers deserve to be part of the strong middle class in America and their unions help to make it so. I will be watching this case closely and will be standing firmly united behind our unions in their fight for their right to bargain collectively for the higher wages that reflect the value of their work.

PUBLIC SERVICE WORKERS ON SUPREME COURT GRANT OF CERT IN *FRIEDRICHS V. CTA

Lawsuit Seeks to Curtail Freedom of Firefighters, Teachers, Nurses, First-Responders to Stick Together and Advocate for Better Public Services, Better Communities

Jeopardizes American Promise that Hard Work Leads Families to a Decent Life

WASHINGTON—NEA President Lily Eskelsen García, AFT President Randi Weingarten, CTA President Eric C. Heins, AFSCME President Lee Saunders, and SEIU President Mary Kay Henry issued the following joint statement today in response to U.S. Supreme Court granting cert to Friedrichs v. California Teachers Association:

“We are disappointed that at a time when big corporations and the wealthy few are rewriting the rules in their favor, knocking American families and our entire economy off-balance, the Supreme Court has chosen to take a case that threatens the fundamental promise of America—that if you work hard and play by the rules you should be able to provide for your family and live a decent life.

“The Supreme Court is revisiting decisions that have made it possible for people to stick together for a voice at work and in their communities—decisions that have stood for more than 35 years—and that have allowed people to work together for better public services and vibrant communities.

“When people come together in a union, they can help make sure that our communities have jobs that support our families. It means teachers can stand up for their students. First responders can push for critical equipment to protect us. And social workers can advocate effectively for children’s safety.

“America can’t build a strong future if people can’t come together to improve their work and their families’ futures. Moms and dads across the country have been standing up in the thousands to call for higher wages and unions. We hope the Supreme Court heeds their voices.”

And public servants are speaking out, too, about how Friedrichs v. CTA would undermine their ability to provide vital services the public depends on. In their own words:

“As a school campus monitor, my job is to be on the front lines to make sure our students are safe. Both parents and students count on me—it’s a responsibility that I take very seriously. It’s important for me to have the right to voice concerns over anything that might impede the safety of my students, and jeopardizing my ability to speak up for them is a risk for everyone.”

—Carol Peek, a school campus security guard from Ventura, Calif.

“I love my students, and I want them to have everything they need to get a high-quality public education. When educators come together, we can speak with the district about class size, about adequate staffing, about the need for counselors, nurses, media specialists and librarians in schools. And we can advocate for better practices that serve our kids. With that collective voice, we can have conversations with the district that we probably wouldn’t be able to have otherwise—and do it while engaging our communities, our parents and our students.”

—Kimberly Colbert, a classroom teacher from St. Paul, Minn.

“As a mental health worker, my colleagues and I see clients who are getting younger and more physical. Every day we do our best work to serve them and keep them safe, but the risk of injury and attack is a sad, scary reality of the job. But if my coworkers and I come together and have a collective voice on the job, we can advocate for better patient care, better training and equipment, and safe staffing levels. This is about all of us. We all deserve safety and dignity on the job, because we work incredibly hard every day and it’s certainly not glamorous.”

—Kelly Druskis-Abreu, a mental health worker from Worcester, Mass.

“Our number one job is to protect at-risk children. Working together, front-line social workers and investigators have raised standards and improved policies that keep kids safe from abuse and neglect. I can’t understand why the Supreme Court would consider a case that could make it harder for us to advocate for the children and families we serve—this work is just too important.”

—Ethel Everett, a child protection worker from Springfield, Mass.

Media Matters Launches Political Correction To Hold Conservatives Accountable

WASHINGTON, DC – Media Matters Action Network today announced the launch of Political Correction, a new project aimed at holding conservative politicians and advocacy groups accountable. As the organization grows and continues to increase its role in the progressive movement, the new brand name will enable web visitors, bloggers, and journalists easier, faster access to the information they need.

Political Correction will expand on MMAN's core work of highlighting and correcting conservative misinformation. In addition to a more user-friendly website, Political Correction will feature an "Eye on the Right" email newsletter and a special section for MJ Rosenberg's Foreign Policy Matters. Over the next year, Political Correction has plans to double in size, ramp up its video tracking program, and increase outreach to media outlets and allied organizations.

"The legislative battles of 2009 proved the Right has no interest in reality," said Ari Rabin-Havt, Media Matters Vice President for Research and Communication. "With no ideas of their own, conservatives resort to fighting progress with lies and fear. Political Correction will confront their lies, expose their deceit, and ensure all Americans know the truth."

Since its launch in May 2009, Media Matters Action Network put conservative politicians and advocacy groups on defense through 800 fact checks, 1,300 blog posts, and 520 videos. As the only organization – progressive or conservative – comprehensively monitoring the House and Senate floors, MMAN was able to highlight conservatives' extreme rhetoric and show Americans the real nature of today's Republican Party.

here's the status of things, which you may already have been briefed on.

Executive Committee of 7 (3 officers and 4 others)) voted unanimously to endorse. Next step is the PAC Committee, which is weighted by PAC participation and the votes are there to endorse. Final step is a vote of the full 120 member Board where the threshold for endorsement is 58%. Sanders forces are working furiously to put off an endorsement. We do not have certainty on hitting the 58% threshold despite the intense work of Lilly and John Stocks. You are scheduled to see the full Board on Saturday morning. John's assessment is that your appearance is critical if they are going to get the endorsement this weekend. There is some risk though that you show up and they remain uncertain of a successful vote so that they put it off for further work by the leadership. They will not call the vote unless they are certain that they will hit the threshold. Downside is that the Sanders people will spin that notwithstanding the PAC Committee recommendation, the Board delayed action. All here assess that it's worth the risk and that you should show up and try to get the endorsement now. If the vote is delayed, Lily and John will say this is a multi-layered process and good progress was made by securing the PAC Committee recommendation. I wanted you to have a good sense of the state of play, because they have to let people know that you will be there no later than tomorrow early am. I and the rest of the team think you should confirm participation, but wanted to give you a chance to discuss if you have a different view.

He was very sensitive to my concerns about his criticism of Bernie, I don't expect it to happen again from him, he's a good guy and we will have breakfast soon. Just hope nobody in the campaign is working this negative side of the street but Joaquin is OK and understood my point completely and we will collaborate going forward...p.s. I told him to run against Cruz for the Senate! Brent

Yes. One thing we can dig into today is comparing our growth pre and post the speech (as compared to other days) -- and who came on post-speech are. Agree with Teddy that, down the line, we can build in some tests in advance of such major speeches.

Elan should weigh in with views that are, you know, actually validated by data, but it seems beyond doubt to me that we get a lift -- not just in emails, but in social follows and general excitement, activity, and good karma -- when we're out there doing big things, and in particular big, unexpected, progressive, tenacious-fighter things. Not only does it give people a little red meat to chew on, but more tactically, it provides a pretext for people to be talking about us, sharing our stuff, etc., and for us to flood the zone with more, and more compelling, content. All of that helps create better conditions for acquisition, and to some degree fundraising, for the simple reason that we're out in front of more eyeballs on more platforms, giving people more inroads to our site and social properties.

We are trying to do an isolated test on this issue of going right after Rs -- will hopefully have something to report back on that piece specifically. But it's hard to imagine that we don't get some added lift out of doing that, too.

The number of emails acquired overall jumped a bit yesterday, but we also had a evenly spread increase in email, referral, and social source. Could this have been because of the TX event? Was the voter rights email the source of email sign ups? Interested to know if we get rewarded for stiking it to the Rs. I should have asked on our call this am, but didn't look at the daily report until now.

Elan, Katie, Teddy? Thoughts?

Subject: Message to Hillary

I was thinking I'd send this in the morning. Let me know your thoughts.

Hillary

I wanted to send you a note with some thoughts. I believe you are going to win the Democratic nomination, even if you lose Iowa and New Hampshire. But how you react to those losses, if they occur, will very much shape the outcome of the race.

I was in New Hampshire and people believe that you are going to win the nomination. In tonight's NYT CBS poll, most people still think you are going to win. So voting for Sanders is a 'free' vote to register their anger at the system. That will change if he wins Iowa. Faced with him as a real potential to be the nominee, I believe people will be scared; particularly with Trump or Cruz as the alternative. But it may take a victory for him for that to happen.

They will then look at you anew. You will optimize that moment if you respond to that loss well.

But it will be up to you. Overall the party is angry at the status quo, rising inequality, a system that is rigged for the rich and are queasy about the establishment. But it will be live to them at some point that they could help make Trump president with a Republican House and Senate.

BUT how you respond to a loss will help determine whether you win this race.

In every race you've run, people need to see in - one form or another - that you actually bleed. It is when you get knocked down or take the punch that they get their measure of you and come to your side. In 2000, we were running basically even until Lazio harassed you to sign his pledge; and Democrats moved decisively in your favor. It also happened in 2008 in New Hampshire: that moment was about you telling people that you are running for them in deeply personal terms – you take these licks because you want to make their lives better.

It was also when we started winning in 08: in Ohio in your victory speech where you said you get knocked down but you get back up. That is when we won the rest of the race. And even in this race, when Democrats saw you with poise, calm and grace bear the 11 hour Benghazi committee kangaroo court.

When the struggle comes, as it may in Iowa, or NH, or both, it is how you handle that struggle that makes Democrats move to you or not.

I believed then and I believe now that contrasting with Obama in Iowa fed their narrative of you as calculating. And today, I believe hard contrasts with Sanders is driving a notion that you are the establishment candidate; because that is what establishment candidates do.

As we know, Nh polls don't matter. They will be shaped by what happens in Iowa. If you lose in Iowa, then that gives you an opportunity to say you've been knocked down, but you are getting up to fight for this nomination. Because you hear them (as you said in New Hampshire 8 years ago). You hear them and you will fight for them.

We have done lots of work on trust in government. The level of anger amongst everyone is high. The key takeaway is people are so disappointed in Washington that it is radicalizing them. How you act is more important than what you promise because there have been so many promises broken. And they can see how you act.

You are on a mission here. You can take your licks as part of that. Because the American people are worth those licks. So many times, that message has worked for you.

I hope this is helpful.

Dear Hannah, attached for the President is a memo providing him with some additional information about the work being considered on islands' energy systems and requesting his feedback as soon as possible. It would be helpful if this could be shared with him before the CHAI Board Meeting tomorrow. Thanks, Ami

 Organizing for America: The Final March for Reform

John --

The Final March for Reform is going strong -- yesterday, OFA supporters made the phones ring off the hook in Congressional offices on Capitol Hill and across the country. But for every member of Congress, there are eight anti-reform lobbyists swarming Capitol Hill -- and the upcoming vote is still too close to call.

So in these crucial, final days, we must make sure the voices of constituents break through the lobbyist attacks. And here's the plan to make it happen:

As the next step in the Final March for Reform, OFA supporters like you will be gathering at volunteer phone banks across the country. We'll be calling supportive voters in critical districts nationwide, asking them to reach out to their representatives and express their strong support for reform. A local OFA organizer will be on hand at every event, and no experience is required.

Here's how to join in: First, find and RSVP for an event near you. Before you go, make sure to invite friends to come with you, or help them find an event in their area on our website. Then join with local supporters at your event and reach out to as many voters as you can -- each call makes a vital difference.

As we speak, insurance-industry lobbyists are deploying from their emergency base at the D.C. Ritz-Carlton, banging down the door of every Congressional office on Capitol Hill to derail reform and preserve their ability to jack up premiums and deny care to those in need.

In the old Washington, that would have been an unstoppable barrage.

But thanks to your unprecedented organizing, the lobbyists have finally met their match: the American people.

So let's get out there, and make sure the people's voice is heard.

Please sign up to join the Final March for Reform event in your area:

What Gen. Clark Actually Said

Media Falsely Claim Clark Attacked McCain's Service

Clark Praised McCain's Service, While Saying it Wasn't a "Qualification to be President"

Washington, DC -- Today Media Matters for America called on members of the media to set the record straight concerning the remarks of retired Gen. Wesley Clark on Sen. John McCain's military record -- a record Clark praised while also saying that it wasn't a "qualification to be president." Many in the media have falsely claimed that Gen. Clark attacked McCain's military service in comments made during the June 29 edition of CBS' Face the Nation.

Few have reported the entirety of what Clark actually said, including his praise of McCain's service, or that his comments actually repeated CBS Face the Nation host Bob Schieffer's own words in response to Schieffer's statement that unlike McCain, Obama has not "ridden in a fighter plane and gotten shot down."

"The media driven notion that Gen. Clark somehow attacked Sen. McCain's military service is patently false. In fact, the opposite is true -- he praised it. This controversy was created and fueled by a media unwilling to live up to the basic journalistic standard of accuracy and thoroughness," said Karl Frisch, a spokesman for Media Matters. "It is a fact that Gen. Clark praised Sen. McCain's military service while also saying that such service is not a 'qualification to be president.' The media have a duty not only to Gen. Clark but the public to correct the record."

What did Clark actually say?

Many in the media have cropped Clark's June 29 Face the Nation interview to the short soundbite: "I don't think riding in a fighter plane and getting shot down is a qualification to be president." Those cropping the interview make two serious errors. First, they ignore that Clark was repeating Face the Nation host Bob Schieffer's words in response to Schieffer's statement that, unlike McCain, Obama has not "ridden in a fighter plane and gotten shot down." Second, they ignore that shortly before that part of Clark's exchange with Schieffer, Clark praised McCain's service: "I certainly honor his service as a prisoner of war. He was a hero to me and to hundreds of thousands of millions of others in the Armed Forces as a prisoner of war. He has been a voice on the Senate Armed Services Committee, and he has traveled all over the world." Clark continued: "But he hasn't held executive responsibility. That large squadron in Air -- in the Navy that he commanded, it wasn't a wartime squadron. He hasn't been there and ordered the bombs to fall. He hasn't seen what it's like when diplomats come in and say, 'I don't know whether we're going to be able to get this point through or not. Do you want to take the risk? What about your reputation? How do we handle it publicly?' He hasn't made those calls, Bob."

First, we want to extend a big thank you.

Because of grassroots supporters like you, we crushed our $50,000 end-of-month fundraising goal. That means we're one step closer to electing a Democratic majority to Congress.

Now that we're past our FEC deadline, all our attention is focused on Super Tuesday. Will Donald Trump sweep all the contests? Or will another Republican swoop in for a surprise win?

We'll share the results once we find out the answers tonight.

Dear John,

We are just $6,300 away from our end-of-quarter goal ... please EVERYONE make a closing contribution of \$15, \$25, \$50, \$75, \$100, \$250 -- whatever you are able to afford -- to put us over the top!!

And if you have already given this quarter, please chip in just a few more dollars ... it's adding up!

There are just 8 hours left before our special 2:1 matching contribution program ends! Please take advantage of this opportunity to have your contribution doubly matched before it's too late!!!!

It's all about momentum ... and having the resources to win.

Please give a "push to our back" ... and put "wind to our sails" ... on the "wave of momentum" YOU are creating ... as we head out on the campaign trail for these last 4 weeks!!!!

This is it ... WE ARE GOING TO DO IT ... let's make it so ... with one final push!

Warmly,
Joe

Dear John,

This is it ...

the expiration of our matching \$2 for \$1 program ...and the last day of our last full-fundraising quarter (midnight tonight) before Election Day.

We are almost where we need to be ... in reaching our goal ... just $16,400 away from hitting our mark!!

Please don't let this terrific opportunity to help slip away, without having made a contribution today. Your contributions of \$15, \$25, \$50, \$100, \$250 -- and more -- are inspiring others to give these past couple of days!

As Time Magazine just reported:

- "Burnished by Pennsylvania's swing-state status and the boatloads of cash both parties have lavished on the race, the tussle between Sestak and Toomey is one of the marquee matchups this fall as Democrats try to maintain control of the upper chamber. ... Sestak ... is an indefatigable campaigner."

We've set sail for victory ... in this "marquee matchup" in the nation ... your team and I are "indefatigable campaigners"!

At midnight tonight, we'll begin finalizing our campaign strategy for the last four weeks. What you do between now and midnight will determine how much flexibility we have in executing those plans.

We won't let you down ... please give us a final push as we enter the last four weeks of the campaign!

Help us "hit our mark" today ... a final contribution of any size ... and it will be matched.

Warmly,
Joe

P.S. If you have contributed already, please consider one further contribution. Every dollar is making a difference in our fight to bring real change to Washington D.C. and leadership to Pennsylvania.

Two additional (timely) calls for WJC if possible, to Steve Wynn and Jim Murren for their help with at-large caucuses.

The asks of the at-large casinos is to:

- Extend paid hours from 1 to 2
- Provide a box lunch
- Provide greater flexibility for employees to give later notice / intent to participate in the at-large caucuses (for example, right now an employee at MGM needs to give a minimum of 10 days notice if they plan to leave work to attend the at-large caucuses)

Call sheets attached, we are happy to provide additional background as needed.

As you know, Podesta is in Las Vegas today, for a strategic NV and March states update meeting with Labor Presidents, including Lee Saunders, Randi Weingarten, Jim Boland, Doug McCarron, Mary Kay Henry, and Terry O'Sullivan* (he arrives tomorrow).

John is also seeing Heather Murren this evening, at 6pm.

HRC will start tomorrow in Las Vegas with an OTR to Caesar's for coffee and a back of house visit. She attends the Labor canvass kick-off with all of the Presidents listed above, except for Terry O'S., whom she will have a separate, private greet with (and not attend LIUNA's canvass kick-off.)

thanks,

Our Chicago super-volunteer. He's a pretty smart guy and some of the suggestions here on lower $ fundraising are worth considering. Very negative on LGBTQ hire. I reported on my last Chicago visit that there is also a lot of ethnic agitation there. Probably a place Biden will try to play so we should pay some attention.

To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>

Dear Chairman Podesta,

First of all, I just want to thank you and the team for all you are doing everyday for our party and our Champion, Hillary :) It's assuring to see all the social media activity from the campaign staff from top to bottom, bottom to top, working so hard and sharing such a strong message of support and enthusiasm.

The grassroots' volunteers have been working really hard with Adam Parkhomenko. His responsiveness and attention to what we can only imagine -- an endless number of questions and inquiries/requests which has been just stellar. I wanted to express my gratitude upfront. The conference calls and letting us know what's in the works is appreciated and I know more tools to empower the grassroots are forthcoming.

I'd like to begin with my concerns on the LGBTQ hire that was recently announced. This is my personal opinion and feeling; though these feelings/concerns are shared by a number of activist friends, who are also supporters of Hillary.

As you know, this summer was a big deal for marriage equality and the LGBTQ community; and it seemed like so much opportunity was lost when no director or team of LGBTQ outreach/coordinators were hired. We were left waiting and wondering until the end of September when the hiring of Mr. Lowell was announced. No doubt he is wonderful person and looks to have some solid work experience, but at the same time his hire is confusing and underwhelming. Where was Hillary on this hire? It feels and looks like she had no part in this hire and that is extremely upsetting!

This is a hire we would expect for a Senate or Governor's race, not for an important & #Herstoric candidate like Secretary of State Clinton. Coming on the heels of the most important ruling for LGBTQ civil rights in the history of our country, while the LGBTQ community is splintering into progressive equality movements of race, immigration, transgender, women's issues, and other forms of discrimination facing everyone else, except for the exclusive white and affluent gay male community that dominates the LGBTQ D.C based organizations. The optics of this hire are highly problematic within a rapidly changing political environment in the LGBTQ community.

The feedback from my friends, many of whom are highly involved in the discussions and debates that are currently happening along the lines of gender, race, immigration, homeless youth, HIV, Trans-persons, etc. view this hire with cynicism, reacting with “eye roll” and accompanied by significant disappointment over the lack of any boldness in this choice.

The feedback about this hire from my friends who are donors is deep disappointment because he appears to lack requisite gravitas expected when soliciting political support and money from a highly sophisticated community.

Optics – of this hire evokes the exclusionary white male dominated Human Rights Campaign. Even at the HRC gala this past weekend in D.C people, were expressing their disappointment to outright anger with respect to the audience, which had very little diversity present.

Where are the 'movement' hires? Surely there were folks with credibility and breadth of experience who applied for this very important hire? I know from a grassroots perspective, many of us have experience working with Jeff Campagna. Even my contacts in Labor and Equality California seemed behind Mr. Campagna, so I'm confused as to why someone like Jeff would be overlooked. Was this an oversight? I'd think if Hillary was serious about the LGBTQ community she would have had a role in this very important hire, and it feels and looks like she had no part in this hire and that it was left to perhaps the talent director and that doesn't feel or look good.

Wouldn't a campaign task force for the LGBTQ community with a strong director at the helm be more appropriate to aggressively court and tie in the various components to build and consolidate community support for Hillary? I see no evidence of this reality. It must happen.

3: Second concern: The figure of $1,700 is the AVERAGE campaign donation from Illinois, reported for last quarter. That is a PROBLEM! As a grassroots organizer and a max donor and someone who helps raise money and has also attended a number of the high dollar events, it's my observation that these events are missed opportunities and leave a considerable amount of money on the table.

These events should be opened up to:

- 10 $1,000 spaces (this would allow for greater diversity at these events);

- 5 spots for local volunteers/ college leaders/organizers - the infusion of youth and the energy they bring really makes the event better and inspires Hillary's hardest and most important workers to carry on;

- Small Business Host Events $500/small business owners - this is affordable by a number of small business owners/many bring women employers;

4. Low Dollar fundraising needs support - each state/finance team should have a staff person dedicated to supporting these events and help get the lower dollar surrogate events going for the $50 - $250 a head;

- Create an incentive for Hill-Raisers/Blazers to recruit and help low dollar fundraisers that commit to raising $2,700 for these events (do $5,400, $10,800 levels as well);

- Reinforce that incentive for those low dollar fundraisers that raise $2,700 by inviting them once they reach their goal to a high dollar event to meet Hillary/photo op :);

- The emails asking for donations need to get on a cycle that works with everyday Americans, like $5 Fridays.

- The amount of emails and follow ups asking for more money makes it feel like my contribution isn't enough, that's the impression the experience leaves one feeling badly;

5: Ethnic Outreach: Would it be possible to get a brief audience on November 2nd with some of the Chicago ethnic leaders: re: Maureen Pikarski who you met in Chicago. I see Hillary has a window in her busy schedule from 3-6 p.m. Also, it seems we have had little traction on the Bosnian American outreach and that is a HIGHLY strategic in Iowa and Missouri and enthusiastic supporters of Hillary. Our Missouri HRC super volunteer has asked the Midwest Fundraising team to schedule a side meeting with Hillary and the leadership of the St. Louis Bosnian community during her next trip to Missouri. The feedback I'm hearing is that folks have mixed feelings about the campaign's response so far and I recommend hiring asap and engage aggressively through the Ethnic Outreach department - more of a TASK FORCE with liaisons to court and engage the diverse constituencies with the sensitivity and respect they deserve. It would be most unfortunate to see another young D.C organizational hire that isn't up to the task for each of the assigned 10 desks.

6: Hillary's 2007 delegates - have they been contacted yet? I shared an updated list with David Huyhn at the DNC Summer Meeting and I hope outreach is happening. I think it would be a wonderful gesture to do some special outreach there. (update David Huyhn says that is underway! :) )

Consider the following issues:

7: Messaging: Hillary's four fights seem to get lost and aren't front and center (we need easy print outs for folks to hand out that are shrunk down so you can print and cut a page into 4 that has four fights on it).

Hillary lacks a slogan like Trump: Let's Make America Great Again or Bernie: Not for Sale etc. etc. perhaps Hillary: A fighter in your corner (you get the idea) Bernie has cornered the market on income equality but Hillary can really pounce on Civil Rights and Social Justice as part an parcel of good economic policy. (As of today, a four fight print out was provided for the debate watch night! THANK YOU!)

8: Disability outreach and mobilization - again that should be a special task force - especially targeting caucus states and swing states. Getting them engaged in volunteer activities and identifying ways to get them to the polls! Dr. Janice Lehrer Stein in San Francisco has spoken to you and Robbie I believe on this matter.

9: Many people would like to contribute to this campaign in other ways that do not include money. CREATE incentives! Like 1,000 sign-ups gets someone an autographed book by Hillary! 5,000 sign ups by one person gets them to a high dollar event, 10,000 sign ups gets the person a professional autographed and framed photo with Hillary and 50,000 sign ups gets you a dinner with Hillary (have this set up like Hillraisers and Hillblazers with recruitment so that folks get credit for the efforts of their recruits)

10: Create another incentive for merchandise: Like Hillraiser Links - provide HillMerchandiser Links so that folks get an incentive/credit for every sale made via purchases on those links...this helps encourage folks to sell and promote the merchandise store! Again - a certain number of sales gets someone free merchandise, an even greater amount of sales gets you an invitation to a fundraiser event with Hillary or Bill or Chelsea, etc.

11: St. Louis is the largest Bosnian American community in the U.S. --around 80,000. Angie Acree, HRC Super Volunteer and the Clinton Campaign volunteer rep in Missouri has asked the Midwest Fundraising Team to arrange for a side meeting between Hillary and the Bosnian American leadership in Missouri during her next fundraising trip. It is the belief of Ajla Delkic, the executive director of the Advisory Council for Bosnia and Herzegovina (based in D.C.) that it would take little attention by Hillary to light this community on fire. Mr. Vajrovic is the leader and is locally connected to the Democratic Party. But no one has ever met with them from the Democratic Party at a senior level. Barack Obama lost Missouri to McCain by 3,903 votes in 2008. These votes are to be SOUGHT aggressively.

12: At the recent Ethnic Council Meeting with Amy Dacey, CEO of the DNC here in Chicago, the talk among the ethnic leaders of Chicago area was the lack of outreach to their constituencies....People were highlighting the absence of aggressive outreach since Bill Clinton's campaigns in 96 and Obama's in 2007 - November 2nd - Hillary is in Chicago ALL day for fundraisers - would be nice if an Ethnic Round Table could be arranged (small one) with Maureen Pikarski who could help make that happen 1-312-718-9351 and if it could be filmed by various news outlets that cater to these constituencies - would be huge in audience reached and for mobilizing the ethnic communities to help in IOWA and in IOWA!

13: Lastly swag: I know and appreciate how much frugality is being exercised in the primary (in stark contrast to 2007) but if perhaps something could be worked out so that grassroots point people in each state are not encumbered with the expense of providing the basics like bumper stickers (that provides free advertising!) lapel stickers at a minimum. This would be for commit to votes/commit to caucus but would really help at the tables/booths so many volunteers do (which many cost money to do) and provide incentives. It really is what is required in getting sign ups. The most successful efforts over the summer were ones that had folks who could afford to buy supplies like this for handing out in exchange for sign ups.

Thank you for your time reading this. Line item one is a very personal observation that has been shared with me from a number of sources involved in the LGBTQ movement/leaders etc - particular midwest to west coast. The rest are number of observations and feedback I've heard from multiple folks along the way.

Thank you for all you do to support Hillary's historic campaign for the presidency. Those of us in the grassroots and a growing contingent of volunteers continue to work hard for our Champion, she is worth it!

John West

John--here's the generic description. Would love to chat about how to do the roll-out, as well as how to raise the issue in other ways. The key in my mind is audience: who exactly are we trying to reach. This gets at a specific group, but won't hit most normal citizens. Been thinking. Also VERY interested in Sept '14 and Dec '15. Hope to speak soon. Tom Gideon, this is huge. Led by eight stalwart Democrats, the Senate Judiciary Committee has passed a constitutional amendment to overturn the awful Citizens United and McCutcheon Supreme Court decisions.

The next step will be a vote in the full Senate.

Sign the petition: The U.S. Senate must pass a constitutional amendment to overturn *Citizens United* and *McCutcheon* .

Citizens United and McCutcheon opened up the floodgates for unlimited campaign spending by the 1%, and we will keep seeing horrible court decisions like these until we change the U.S. Constitution to end the absurd notion that money is "speech."

That's why we are doing something amazing before the final Senate vote. Together with our progressive partners, we are going to deliver more than 2,000,000 signatures in support of the constitutional amendment to the offices of the 20 key Senators who will decide the outcome.

Subject: INVITE: DC Discussions, Thursday, November 13th 6-8pm

Dear DC Heinz Family, Friends and Supporters –

Please join the Heinz College Washington DC for our Fall 2014 DC Discussions, "Olympic Opportunity." We are delighted this panel features the work of several Carnegie Mellon alums, including our very own MS DC '12 graduates whose book, Bidding for Development, grew out of their Systems Synthesis project research.

Olympic Opportunity: Going for the Gold or Spending in the Red?

Panelists:

Ngiste Abebe, Co-author, Bidding for Development
Trina Bolton, Co-author, Bidding for Development
Dr. Dennis Coates, UMBC, Department of Economics
Chris Watts, Managing Director, 4POINT4

Moderator:

John A. Flaherty
Distinguished Service Professor and Director, Heinz DC

Thursday, November 13, 2014

6:00-8:00pm

Heinz College Washington DC

Hall of the States, 3rd Floor
444 N. Capitol Street, NW
Washington D.C. 20001

10/18/2016

Appetizers and Refreshments will be served.

Please RSVP by November 10 via <https://heinzcollege.wufoo.com/forms/heinz-college-dc-discussions-panel/> or 202-403-8600.

This panel will explore the complex business of bidding for mega-events. The panelists will weigh a city's potential for long-term strategic development against the extreme price tag of bidding to host. The dialogue will focus on the largest global mega-event, the Olympic Games, and span dynamic policy areas from transportation and urban development to sports economics and diplomacy. Panelists will also share insights from the recent Springer publication Bidding for Development: How the Olympic Bid Process Can Accelerate Transportation Development.

Heinz College DC Discussions is organized by Carnegie Mellon University's Heinz College Washington DC to foster informal, off-the-record dialogue among alumni, faculty, students and thought leaders on current social, policy and public interest issues. The series is hosted by John A. Flaherty, Distinguished Service Professor and Director, Heinz College Washington DC. For more information, visit www.heinz.cmu.edu/dc.

Subject: Not this time, not ever!

Hi John,

We are just a few hours away from a deadline that will set the tone for the campaign moving forward. With your support we'll send a clear message that this district believes in what we are doing and will continue to do in Washington.

Will you help me by making your contribution today?

Last year we faced down attacks from right-wing billionaires who tried to buy the election. We expect those same groups and individuals to use the same tactic against my campaign this time. We need your help to send a clear message that their tricks won't work this time or ever!

Make your contribution before midnight tonight by clicking here.

With your help we're going to have a great start to the new year and make sure we have the resources we need to win.

Thank you,

Mike Honda

I saw Sec. Clinton's comments on immigration at the Capital City Fruit on immigration where she said, "ya know if we go around this room there's a lot of immigrant stories. You know, all my grandparents, ya know, came over here. My grandfather went to work in a mill in Scranton, Pennsylvania..." (video attached on that).

One of my hobbies is doing the ancestry of presidential candidates and from what I can tell only one of her grandparents were born overseas. Her fraternal grandfather Hugh Rodham Sr.

I know she's talked about her grandmother immigrating before at an an event last year (17:50).

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qtBePkrEr3w&list=UUSQoxOTCUydTyTAicLbmVAQ>

"She immigrated with her family as a young girl to Scranton and went to work — very young—in a silk mill, and then she met and married my grandfather, who had also come to this country as a young man from the coalmining area in Newcastle, in England."

Looking at census records it seems only her grandfather was an immigrant. Coming as a two-year-old boy:

You need an ancestry log in for this (I can give you mine if you need it).

While Hannah Rodham is listed as PA born on the 1910, 1920, and 1930 census records:

Her fraternal grandparents are also both listed as born in Illinois on the 1920 and 1930 census:

http://search.ancestry.com/cgi-bin/sse.dll?MS_AdvCB=1&rank=1&new=1&MSAV=-1&msT=1&gss=angs-g&gsfn=Edwin&gsfn_x=XO&gsln=Howell&gsln_x=XO&mawpn_ftp=Illinois%2c+USA&mawpn=16&mawpn_PInfo=5-%7c0%7c1652393%7c0%7c2%7c3247%7c16%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c0%7c&mawpn_x=XO&pcat=ROOT_CATEGORY&h=14812479&db=1920usfedcen&indiv=1&ml_ppos=10

<http://search.ancestry.com/cgi-bin/sse.dll?db=1930usfedcen&h=83783432&indiv=try&vc=Record:OtherRecord&rhSource=6061>

Her fraternal grandfather's draft card also lists him as born in the USA.

OBAMA FOR AMERICA ANNOUNCES NATIONAL CAMPAIGN CO-CHAIRS

CHICAGO - Obama for America announced today the campaign's National Co-Chairs, a diverse group of leaders from around the country committed to re-electing President Obama. They will serve as ambassadors for the President, advise the campaign on key issues, and help engage and mobilize voters in all 50 states.

"The President's National Co-Chairs will be tremendous assets on the ground as we build the biggest grassroots campaign in history," said Jim Messina, Obama for America Campaign Manager. "They each share the President's vision for a future where every American can have a fair shot at success, where hard work pays off and responsibility is rewarded."

Our National Co-Chairs' varied backgrounds and experiences will prove invaluable as they connect with the President's supporters and advocate on his behalf on the campaign trail. They are proud of the President's record and leadership in rebuilding the economy after the worst economic crisis in generations and helping restore security to middle-class families through cutting taxes, investing in education, expanding manufacturing, increasing America's energy independence, ensuring that everyone has access to affordable health care, and making sure that everyone - from Wall Street to

Main Street - plays by the same rules.

After nearly 12 years, I will be retiring from Quadrangle at the end of this year. I cannot begin to express adequately my thanks to our investors, my partners and colleagues, and our portfolio company management teams. I have learned an enormous amount from all of them as I have from the professional services providers who have advised our firm so capably.

For the next six months, my family and I will be living in Mumbai. I look forward to seeing you in India or upon our return to New York next summer.

Please note my new contact information. Happily, my assistant, Alisa Isenberg, will continue to work with me.

Obama escalates push-back against Elizabeth Warren and other trade deal critics

By Greg Sargent April 24 at 12:42 PM

On a conference call with a small group of reporters, President Obama significantly intensified his criticism of Elizabeth Warren and other opponents of the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade deal, accusing them of being “dishonest” about the secrecy around the TPP process, suggesting they were playing to their “fundraising” lists, and arguing flatly that they were using “misinformation that stirs up the base but doesn’t serve them well.”

The push-back, directed largely at fellow Democrats, shows just how sharply the trade deal is dividing the party — a schism that could only intensify in the days ahead.

On the call, Obama ran through a number of Democratic and liberal objections to the deal. He responded to complaints about the “fast track” process, and the existence of an Investor-State Dispute Settlement mechanism that critics say could benefit major corporations at the expense of local governments.

“The one that gets on my nerves the most is the notion that this is a ‘secret’ deal,” Obama said. “Every single one of the critics who I hear saying, ‘this is a secret deal,’ or send out emails to their fundraising base saying they’re working to prevent this secret deal, can walk over today and read the text of the agreement. There’s nothing secret about it.”

That appeared to be a response to Elizabeth Warren’s recent fundraising letter claiming the administration’s promises can’t be trusted because “people like you can’t see the actual deal.” Obama allowed that some parts of the deal cannot currently be read, but argued that allowing those portions that have not yet been finalized to receive public exposure could undermine ongoing negotiations.

Obama added of the “fast track” provision that “there’s nothing fast about it.” He defended the current Wyden-Hatch fast track framework, which will soon get a full Senate vote, noting that Congress would examine the deal for three months before voting on it.

“When I keep on hearing people repeating this notion that it’s ‘secret,’ I gotta say, it’s dishonest,” Obama continued. “And it’s concerning when I see friends of mine resorting to these kinds of tactics.”

Warren’s fundraising letter was carefully worded to say that the deal is not available to the public before the fast track vote, not before the final vote. After the fast track vote it will be public.

Obama also pushed back on critics who point out that there’s nothing in TPP to combat currency manipulation by other countries to juice their exports, saying the administration is still committed to fighting it.

“We’re still working with members of Congress who are interested in the currency issue to potentially do something parallel to TPP,” he said. “But is not a good idea, and not plausible, for us to get an effective currency provision inside of TPP” that other countries and our own Treasury Department and Federal Reserve “could accept.”

What’s still unclear, though, is what happens if Congress and the administration can’t reach a deal on a separate currency provision; TPP would presumably move forward without one.

Obama also insisted that critics were wrong to see in TPP another NAFTA, arguing that TPP — unlike NAFTA — would compel other countries to adopt enforceable labor standards, leveling the playing field and opening them up to U.S. exports — creating more U.S. jobs.

“When I listen to criticism of this deal, what I primarily hear is criticism of NAFTA,” Obama said. “If you don’t like the fact that labor provisions aren’t enforceable right now, why wouldn’t you want a trade deal that makes labor provisions enforceable with some of the same countries we currently trade with?”

It’s still unclear how enforceable TPP’s labor standards would be. It remains to be seen, for instance, whether the deal would require a country like Vietnam to be fully compliant with its standards before participating in it; it’s also possible a future labor-unfriendly president could decline to enforce them.

“I’m not adverse to continuing to engage with members of Congress or unions or anybody else in the progressive community about how we can make sure this is the strongest agreement possible,” Obama concluded. “But what I am adverse to is a bunch of ad hominem attacks and misinformation that stirs up the base but ultimately doesn’t serve them well. And I’m going to be pushing back very hard if I keep on hearing that.”

Obama’s escalating rhetoric — and his intensifying disagreement with fellow Democrats right now — foreshadow a potentially more bruising fight to come.

REPORT: Meet The 2010 GOP Freshman Class _ »

Following last night’s election, over 100 freshmen Republicans will take their seats in the 112th Congress. These GOPers come from disparate backgrounds, but they are united by their adherence to the extreme wing of conservative ideology.

A new ThinkProgress investigation has found that the incoming GOP freshman class is rife with legislators who not only oppose climate change legislation, but deny that manmade global warming even exists. They are pushing not just to end birthright citizenship, but also demand that the United States reduce the number of legal immigrants.

Here is a snapshot of the GOP Class of 2010’s extremism:

ENVIRONMENT

- 50% deny the existence of manmade climate change
- 86% are opposed to any climate change legislation that increases government revenue

IMMIGRATION

- 39% have already declared their intention to end the 14th Amendment’s guarantee of birthright citizenship
- 32% want to reduce legal immigration

TAXES/SPENDING

- 91% have sworn to never allow an income tax increase on any individual or business – regardless of deficits or war
- 79% have pledged to permanently repeal the estate tax
- 48% are pushing for a balanced budget amendment

This is where individual incoming GOP freshmen stand on each issue:

Dan,

This is good. Three small points:

- 1) In the section on her Mom, if possible, I'd add a couple of sentences on background of what progressive politics did to help her succeed. Good public schools, minimum wage, something so it's not just her grit that worked. That's the conservative narrative. If that's not doable in this speech, I think we need to work on that going forward. I do a version of that in my book Power of Progress, around my parents who come from even more humble backgrounds, but who succeeded and gave a chance for us to succeed.
- 2) what do you think about a conscious reference to Picketty in the section on economists analysis of growth and inequality? It's all the rage and weighing in on the the debate may make her seem tuned in and sympathetic to the leaning left argument. Not arguing for much here. Just a reference to the debate he has set off.
- 3) strike the gushing on Anne-Marie. Time for credibility.

John, it was great to see you yesterday. I hope that meeting wasn't too painful. I find it remarkably encouraging to have you there!

Also, I wanted to share this speech draft with you. Tomorrow, HRC is going to speak at the New America Foundation. We have two goals with this: 1) Preview her youth employment work at the Foundation and 2) add her voice to the national debate about economic inequality and mobility. This will very likely get a fair amount of attention. So would love your thoughts. Have also sent to Neera, who has helped me develop the material.

Thanks

That's why we need you in the streets building the fight for 15 movement that says you shouldn't have to be a CEO to get a raise.

I think you can get by without saying $15. SEIU is not expecting that. Of course they could be pleasantly surprised. But not necessary. Raising wages is good.

Dear Friend,

As you may know, I've spent the last two years building a new kind of energy company--one that does good in the world. Will you sign up? We now serve customers in DC, MD, PA, NJ and DE. We're rapidly expanding too.

Click on this link to start the enrollment:

<https://ethicalelectric.com/referral/go/founder>

I'm offering everybody who signs up via my link a $50 enrollment bonus.

If you're already buying "green power" here is what makes Ethical Electric different.

1. We are an explicitly progressive company. We share a portion of all revenue with the causes our customers care about. In contrast, a local competitor, WGES, is in an exclusive supply deal with Shell Energy. Yeah, that Shell which has plundered and murdered their way across the globe. Progressives need to stop writing checks to companies engaged in this kind of behavior.
2. Our clean energy is from local wind farms in Pennsylvania built with union labor and by a merchant generator. This means the developer built the wind farm speculating that they would have a buyer. We want more wind farms built this way because if that becomes a viable economic model for building clean energy it means we don't have to wait for big utilities to agree to buy the power. This is a vastly more responsible way to support clean energy than other green power providers.
3. In contrast to some other options, we cost about the same as what you pay right now or have paid recently. In some cases you can save money.

Look for more emails from me soon on our progress. Please sign up today.

Thanks

Founded in 1975, Zuckerman Spaeder is a national litigation boutique that represents individual and institutional clients in high-stakes civil and criminal cases. Zuckerman Spaeder counts among its ranks many of the nation's leading lawyers, who include former federal prosecutors and public defenders, as well as attorneys who have served in congressional offices and federal agencies. The firm has been named to The National Law Journal's "Midsize Hot List" every year since 2010, and was recognized by The American Lawyer as a finalist for its "Litigation Boutique of the Year" each year it has selected firms for such distinction. Zuckerman Spaeder is also the top-listed firm for white collar criminal defense in Best Lawyers, with more attorneys recognized in that category than any other firm in the country, and in 2010 U.S. News and World Report ranked the firm in the top-tier nationally for commercial litigation. The firm's attorneys have extensive experience in matters related to securities violations, tax controversy, political law, legal ethics, food and drug law, and health care fraud. Subject: Big news on "Don't Ask, Don't Tell"

 Organizing for America

John --

It's time.

The Pentagon study released yesterday confirms what we've long known: The military is ready to repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

The report found that 70 percent of troops do not believe the change would have a negative impact on morale, and troop readiness would not be affected.

This important news means that we are closer than ever to ending this discriminatory policy that punishes patriotic men and women who want nothing more than to serve our country -- and harms our own security by preventing qualified and much-needed Americans from serving.

Last time, we were just two votes shy of passing repeal in the Senate. And now the lawmakers who have been dragging their feet have no excuses left.

Neither do we. On this issue, our voices may not get more powerful than they are today -- after the military has weighed in, when the media is paying close attention, just before the Senate starts its debate.

Let's ensure the Senate passes repeal -- and sends it to President Obama's desk -- before the end of the year.

Please add your name to the President's call to repeal "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" now.

The release of the Pentagon's report is just one more sign that the days are numbered for "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

But the Republican opposition in the Senate -- led by Senator John McCain -- is already digging in its heels.

People like Sen. McCain said they would defer to military leadership -- and then refused to budge when people like Chairman of the Joint Chiefs Admiral Mike Mullen, Defense Secretary Robert Gates, and former Secretary of State Colin Powell all came forward to support repeal.

These senators said they were worried about how repeal would weaken our military or hurt troop morale -- and that we should wait for the results of the Pentagon study.

Well, the results are in: Our military believes the time has come to end "Don't Ask, Don't Tell."

We know that some of these senators are going to do everything they can to shift their standards once again. But we don't need them all to agree with us -- we just need two more votes to end this policy once and for all.

With the hearings set to begin tomorrow, it's important we make our voices heard now.

Join President Obama -- and add your name to the call for repeal:

<http://my.barackobama.com/RepealDADT>

Thanks -- now let's make history,

Mitch

Last week the N.J. Democratic leadership [State Chairman John Currie]sent a national message to the National Democratic Party, forget about this email propaganda and support our strongest, most experienced candidate that we will win the general election against a flawed Republican field dominated by reality t.v. star Donald east ,i.e. the former Secretary of State. Israel and our MIDDLE-EAST allies will have a friend . Hillary `s experience will gradually reassert U.S. prominence in terms of world leadership both economically and diplomatically. Hillary Clinton will be the next President of the United States.

CORY BOOKER:

U.S. Senator Cory Booker is Vice-Presidential . He is working aggressive for Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton . Cory is already a respected Senator who works both sides of the aisle. Keep in mind that although he previously governed the City of Newark, he was a graduate of Stanford University, Yale Law , and a Rhodes Scholar . This time around the V.P. CHOICE SHOULD BE BASED ON QUALITY OF LEADERSHIP. Cory Booker is well ahead of the game. He would be a great national choice and compliment an historic Hillary Clinton victory.

THE N.J. ENDORSEMENT : [THIS ENDORSEMENT HAS NATIONAL SIGNFICANCE AND SENDS A MESSAE TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY]

No doubt that the N.J.State Chairman John Currie and his leadership team are sending a national message,i.e. , Hillary Clinton is a leader and our MOST VIABLE national candidate as the next President of the United States.
Great work by John and his team , Jennifer, Lizette, Kelly , and Chris. Keep in mind, without Secretary Clinton on top of this ticket, the Democratic party is vulnerable. Time to shatter the glass ceiling!

Subject: Willy Wonka Golden Ticket - the return of!!

Dear John,

One of the keys to our primary victory this past spring was the distribution of a "Scorecard" that contrasted Senator Specter's and Joe's positions.

We have brought back our "Willy Wonka Golden Ticket" ... our "Scorecards" ... our "key to victory"!

Voters have been stunned; stopped in their tracks by the "Scorecards" simplicity and honest truth ... followed a few seconds later with the recipient saying ... "Joe Sestak ... he's got my vote!"

As the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette said in endorsing Joe:

- "Mr. Toomey ... would easily replicate the former senator's [GOP Senator Rick Santorum] voting record. An analysis last May by Pollster.com said Mr. Toomey was more conservative than 98 percent of all members of Congress since 1995 -- and much more conservative than Mr. Santorum."

These "Willy Wonka Golden Tickets" ... are exposing Congressman Toomey's "extreme, conservative views" ... and are moving undecided voters to Joe!

As we enter the final phases of our GOTV operation, "Bring It On Home", our army of volunteers will be fanning out across Pennsylvania distributing these "Willy Wonka Golden Tickets".

Today ... we are placing our last major order of these "Scorecards" for our volunteers to carry, mail-houses to mail, and poll workers to distribute on Election Day ... and we're asking for your help to make a major financial push so that "millions of Pennsylvania's voters" will receive a copy of these Scorecards (or version of).

PLEASE help us deliver these "Willy Wonka Golden Tickets" to voters across the state by making a contribution of \$15, \$25, \$50, \$100, \$250 -- whatever you are able to afford!

We are just 6 days away from Election Day ... TODAY is a major, critical fundraising push for us!! Help us ... as we work to make Pennsylvanians' "dreams come true"!

Thank you!

Rich Sestak

Subject: Need to Vote by Mail? Deadline Approaching!

NANCY ROTERING

Democrat for Congress

Friends,

The March 10th deadline to request a mail ballot is rapidly approaching, and we want to make sure you don't miss your chance to vote for Nancy!

You might be on vacation, lack convenient transportation or are away at school. Or maybe you would simply rather vote from the comfort of your own home.

The reason no longer matters: in Illinois, all registered voters* may request a Vote By Mail ballot.

You may request your ballot online or by mail. Either way, your application must be received no later than March 10th.

Lake County voters may request their ballot by visiting the Lake County Clerk's Voter Power page, or may print an application by clicking here.

Cook County voters may request their ballot at the Cook County Clerk's website, or may print an application by clicking here.

VOTE BY MAIL

Need assistance requesting your mail ballot? Feel free to contact our campaign by email at info@nancyroteringforcongress.com, or by phone at (847) 266-7400.

Nancy Rotering is the two-term Mayor of Highland Park, Illinois and is running to represent Illinois' 10th Congressional District. She challenged the status quo to get the results residents needed. Nancy enacted tough reforms, balanced five consecutive budgets and had the courage to take on the NRA and pass one of the nation's only local assault weapons bans and won when the U.S. Supreme Court allowed the ban to stand. Under Nancy's leadership, a legal aid clinic opened providing free services to vulnerable residents. Nancy has been a leader in inclusive government, making sure all residents have a voice and that the civil rights of all are respected. Sara -

Per our conversation, John Manly is close to Michael D'Antonio (who wrote Never Enough about Trump) and Michael wants to meet with the Clinton campaign's opposition research team. He does not want to be paid. And he has 9 hours of taped conversations with Donald Trump.

John Manly needs to join the meeting as well. I have copied him on this email.

John, Sara is a close friend and a senior advisor on Hillary's campaign. She gets things done!!

Sara, let us know the next steps. Also, as I mentioned, Mr. D'Antonio resides on Long Island.

Subject: New Paper Topic

Prof. Podesta and Judge Leon,

I write to you today to see if it would be acceptable for me to change my paper topic. I had originally planned on surveying wartime investigations (Civil War, WWI, WWII, Iraq and Afghanistan). However, after additional research and a good deal of thought, I believe I have found a topic much better suited to my academic interests.

New Topic: I would like to examine why Congress should investigate the anti-homosexuality law that was recently passed in Uganda, and the United States government's engagement with Uganda on this issue and decision on whether or not to withdraw foreign aid from the country as a result. I would also analyze this through the lens of how one would go about initiating and conducting this proposed investigation using our class materials and Congressional Investigations: Politics and Process (Hamilton, Muse & Amer).

I have long been interested in this human rights issue, as I wrote a paper about it as an undergraduate after it was first proposed as a bill. (I would not be using any text or information collected for that paper.) I am in the International Women's Human Rights Clinic this semester, and my team is focusing on girls' and women's rights in education in Uganda. I do not foresee my proposed paper topic overlapping in any way with any work done in the Clinic, as the issues are quite distinct, but I did want to flag this. I would, of course, also mention this to the Clinic before proceeding.

Many thanks,

Amanda

Choice of Palin Promises Failed Energy Policies of the Past

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The League of Conservation Voters (LCV), which works to turn environmental values into national priorities, today expressed its deep disappointment with John McCain's choice of Sarah Palin as his running mate.

"Unfortunately, with her support for drilling in the Arctic Refuge and off our coasts, Governor Palin will simply continue the failed policies of the Bush-Cheney Administration and their Big Oil friends – policies that could make us even more dependent on foreign oil," LCV President Gene Karpinski said.

Governor Palin characterizes McCain's flip-flop on drilling offshore as a positive step in his transformation from maverick to Big Oil's best friend. She has implored McCain to change his position against drilling in the Arctic – something she will have plenty of opportunities to pursue as his running mate.

In addition to supporting backward-looking energy policies, Governor Palin has also opposed a crucial clean water initiative, sued the federal government for listing polar bears as threatened under the Endangered Species Act, and opposed other important wildlife protection measures.

This ticket now stands in even starker contrast to the visionary energy plan laid out by Senator Obama last night, which will create millions of new jobs, improve our national security, and reduce global warming pollution.

"Now more than ever, America is in need of real vision and leadership to bring us a new clean energy future, and the McCain-Palin ticket offers nothing of the sort."

The exurban vote makes up 12.5% of the overall vote total in Ohio, according to NCEC. Of that, 8.9% falls within either Cleveland or Columbus. I had a chance to go back and look at cable penetration numbers for these exurban areas, and they are surprisingly high in many places (around 75%). The strategy, at this point, would be to supplement broadcast with pinpointed cable in the exurban areas. That could make the costs of cable come down but not by too much.

Good stuff!

I would go with tweet 2 but don't feel strongly.

I made some suggested trims to the statement (literally just cut, did not add). Feel free to disregard if it isn't helpful or if the train has already left.

My one general comment is to avoid getting in the weeds of "the senate passed something but the house won't vote on it". I'd keep it big picture--congress needs to take action. Blaming one house or one party gets her down into the bickering and sounds like Washington.

I support the President's decision to focus finite resources on deporting felons rather than families. Only Congress can finish the job by passing permanent bipartisan reform that keeps families together, treats everyone with dignity and compassion, upholds the rule of law, protects our border and national security, and brings millions of hard-working people out of the shadows and into the formal economy so they can pay taxes and contribute to our nation's prosperity. Our disagreements on this important issue may grow heated at times, but I am confident that people of good will and good faith can yet find common ground.

- 3) Blessed to live in a nation of immigrants. Proud of POTUS and hoping that Congress will see the light and pass permanent bipartisan reform

Draft statement:

I support the President's decision to focus finite resources on deporting felons rather than families. I was hopeful that the bipartisan bill passed by the Senate in 2013 would spur the House of Representatives to act, but they refused even to advance an alternative. Their abdication of responsibility paved the way for this executive action, which follows established precedent from Presidents of both parties going back 70 years. But, only Congress can finish the job by passing permanent bipartisan reform that keeps families together, treats everyone with dignity and compassion, upholds the rule of law, protects our border and national security, and brings millions of hard-working people out of the shadows and into the formal economy so they can pay taxes and contribute to our nation's prosperity. Our disagreements on this important issue may grow heated at times, but I am confident that people of good will and good faith can yet find common ground. We should never forget that we're not discussing abstract statistics – we're talking about real families with real experiences. We're talking about parents lying awake at night afraid of a knock on the door that could tear their families apart, people who love this country, work hard, and want nothing more than a chance to contribute to the community and build better lives for themselves and their children.

Nick is talking this through with her on the plane as we speak, but they don't have any internet. She's more open than she was last night to doing tweet followed by in person comment rather than paper statement, so would be helpful to have a unified recommendation on process. On substance, she agrees we should keep shortening and try to stay pretty close to WH line. I'm getting some specific edits, will keep revising and recirculate.

Her Ferguson comments were so well received, despite criticism for their tardiness, because she said something new and unique. It made her look like a leader. I echo Dan's concern that something too generic will look like she's merely checking the box, particularly as a paper statement. If the goal is only to tell the press immediately that she supports the President, I think Dan's suggestion of a tweet tonight followed by something more thoughtful at the event tomorrow, makes sense to me. The press might only care about her backing the President, but I imagine there are some vocal constituencies that will look very carefully at the entire statement and whether it shows personal concern and thought.

My assumption is that all the press cares about is if she's backing Obama or not. I could be wrong but that's what's driving my thinking. In which case short feels more decisive and genuine to me.

My only concern is that brief and decisive not equal generic, which to me is the way to sound inauthentic here. In my view, some version of the second paragraph, both in terms of putting a human face on the issue and in terms of recognizing that this is more complicated than our politics on both sides likes to admit, is the part where HRC can be HRC. But I'm very open to the idea that perhaps the answer here is to tweet 140 characters of straightforward support on Thursday night, not put out a paper statement, and then give a more full and thoughtful answer on camera on Friday during her Q&A with Walter Isaacson.

I believe this has to fit into 5 sentences at most since our audience is the press and they will only print 1 to 3 of them so we might as well control which ones they use.

I assume we have a zillion constituencies chiming in about aspects of this but my view is our audience should be the press and real people in which case she needs to briefly state her support and hit congress for inaction. Brief and decisive is better in my view.

Sorry. I will try to be constructive in the am but this reads and feels like what folks would expect from her who are not a fan or who believe she is running - a calculated effort to have it all in a statement with something for everyone.

I would opt for a shorter, simpler formulation - which I know is near impossible or that is what we would be reading from you. I worry though that this in form and in substance will remind folks what they don't like about politicians and her.

The heart of it is:

- 1) does she support the action the President is taking and would she have taken it?
- 2) And given the action, what is the path forward she sees for the country?

Below is what I think she should say about the President's executive action, either in statement form or on camera. It's long, but this is not a simple issue and we have a lot of interests and constituencies to consider. I've tried here to express support for POTUS without getting bogged down in the details of what is sure to be an unpopular measure, seen as both too much and too little, and then pivot to the need for broader Congressional action (defined by a set of principles rather than by slavish attachment to the DOA Senate bill). I also went back to our 2013 statement on gay marriage and reprised the theme of urging respectful, substantive debate and recognizing that a lot of people aren't going to agree with us on this. Finally, I tried to root the issue in the lived experiences of actual families, to make this a debate about human beings rather than legal precedents.

I know she's eager to take a look, so it would be great to hear quick reactions.

If their goal was to make the speech look completely political, bring the President of the United States down to be on par with the crazy Republican candidates and elevate John Boehner - this was a great strategy.

Subject: INCREDIBLE grassroots milestone

Friend,

We're within range of an incredible grassroots milestone:

$1 MILLION ONLINE IN 2015 FOR TED'S CAMPAIGN

That's AMAZING. But with the end of the year coming up fast, we don't have much time to hit this goal.

If everyone reading this chips in $5 or more, we'll hit our goal in minutes. Will you help out?

If you've saved payment info with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately.

$5 »	$35 »
$50 »	$100 »
$250 »	Other »

This grassroots surge couldn't have come at a better time. The Koch brothers and their dark money allies have spent up to $10.7 million against Ted this year alone. This is our chance to fight back before the books close on 2015.

This is the hottest race in the country and it's only going to get hotter in 2016. So please, if you want to help Ted take back Ohio, chip in today:

Thanks,

Team Strickland

Please see Maria's note below. The attachment includes a long list of names for various agency teams and to serve as 'advisors'. Given the size of our teams, accommodating this request would be tough, but stepping back, generally, how do we want to accommodate labor? Earlier we discussed outreach, particularly on personnel, but her email indicates that they assume something beyond that.

Hi Lisa and Melody, Change to Win finally got some names down for consideration for agency review teams and advisors, etc—which Joseph Geevarghese, a policy person over there, asked me to provide to you all-. Some of the names are definitely worth considering—I know some of the folks on the list and can give you some thoughts (would rather not do in writing, if you know what I mean). But given that the teams are going to be small, maybe this list is good for a couple of additions and the rest can be part of the outreach effort. Sorry, on phone so focused more on overall thoughts than line edits. Can call you directly if any of this is unclear. Sending to all so people can react, push back, etc.

I originally flagged HRC's Maddow remarks as potentially problematic in part because her wording closely linked her to two unfavorable policies of the past even as no one in the community was asking her to "own" them. Given that, my recommendation would be to make this statement about just her, her evolution, and her record -- not bring in WJC.

Relatedly, if we release a statement tonight, it will very clearly be in response to the Maddow interview. To the extent we can, I advocate for owning that so that we can clean this up completely, rightly position her as a champion of LGBT issues, and make sure we move on from any discussion of looming amendments or her being involved in passing either DADT or DOMA. Without getting into the weeds, can we say that the broader point is that the country is in a different place now on LGBT issues -- and thank goodness it is -- and that she's so happy each policy has been placed in the dustbin of history?

Last thought: I have raised this a few times to a smaller number of people on this thread but will flag this for the larger group as well. At Keene State College, she specifically cited friends playing a part in her evolution, which we echo here. That's fine, IMO, and quite believable. But if I were a reporter and wanted to keep the evolution story alive, I would start asking which friends she was talking to and ask us to provide them. Not a problem per se, but I think it is worth flagging now so we aren't caught by surprise later.

On Sunday, October 25, 2015, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

This is a little long, but see what you think. Tried to 1) place this in a context of 'asked and answered,' 2) point to how they've both forthrightly explained their evolution, 3) cite her positive LGBT record, 4) get in a little dig at Sanders for being so backwards looking.

STATEMENT

In 2013, when the Supreme Court was considering whether to uphold the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), Bill and I explained publicly how and why we became strong supporters of marriage equality. Bill, who signed DOMA nearly twenty years ago after an overwhelming vote in Congress, called the law a discriminatory vestige of a less tolerant America and urged the Court to strike it down. I added my voice in support of marriage equality "personally and as a matter of policy and law." As I said then, LGBT Americans are full and equal citizens and they deserve the full and equal rights of citizenship. Like so many others, my personal views have been shaped over time by people I have known and loved, by my experience representing our nation on the world stage, my devotion to law and human rights, and the guiding principles of my faith. That's why, as a Senator, I pushed for laws that would extend protections to the LGBT community in the workplace and that would make violence towards LGBT individuals a hate crime. And as Secretary of State, I put LGBT rights on the global agenda and told the world that "gay rights are human rights and human rights are gay rights." In my speech last night in Iowa, I didn't look back to the America of the past, I looked forward to the America we need to build together. I pledged to fight for LGBT Americans who, despite all our progress, in many places can still get married on Saturday and fired on Monday just because of who they are and who they love. In this campaign and as President, I will keep fighting for equality and opportunity for every American.

Since I was asked on Friday about the Defense of Marriage Act in an interview on MSNBC, I've checked with people who were involved then to make sure I had all my facts right. It turns out I was mistaken and the effort to pass a constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage came some years later. The larger point I was trying to make about DOMA, however, is still true. It was neither proposed nor supported by anyone in the Clinton administration at the time. It was an effort by the Republicans in Congress to distract attention from the real issues facing the country by using gay marriage, which had very little support then, as a wedge issue in the election. The legislation passed by overwhelming veto-proof margins in both houses of Congress and President Clinton signed it with serious reservations he expressed at the time. Luckily the country has evolved way beyond this in the last 20 years and most Americans, including the Supreme Court, now embrace LGBT equality. We are a better country for it. Although there is much work that remains, and I'm eager to help advance the day when we are all truly equal.

Bill Clinton: It's time to overturn DOMA

The writer is the 42nd president of the United States.

In 1996, I signed the Defense of Marriage Act. Although that was only 17 years ago, it was a very different time. In no state in the union was same-sex marriage recognized, much less available as a legal right, but some were moving in that direction. Washington, as a result, was swirling with all manner of possible responses, some quite draconian. As a bipartisan group of former senators stated in their March 1 amicus brief to the Supreme Court, many supporters of the bill known as DOMA believed that its passage "would defuse a movement to enact a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, which would have ended the debate for a generation or more." It was under these circumstances that DOMA came to my desk, opposed by only 81 of the 535 members of Congress.

On March 27, DOMA will come before the Supreme Court, and the justices must decide whether it is consistent with the principles of a nation that honors freedom, equality and justice above all, and is therefore constitutional. As the president who signed the act into law, I have come to believe that DOMA is contrary to those principles and, in fact, incompatible with our Constitution.

Because Section 3 of the act defines marriage as being between a man and a woman, same-sex couples who are legally married in nine states and the District of Columbia are denied the benefits of more than a thousand federal statutes and programs available to other married couples. Among other things, these couples cannot file their taxes jointly, take unpaid leave to care for a sick or injured spouse or receive equal family health and pension benefits as federal civilian employees. Yet they pay taxes, contribute to their communities and, like all couples, aspire to live in committed, loving relationships, recognized and respected by our laws.

When I signed the bill, I included a statement with the admonition that “enactment of this legislation should not, despite the fierce and at times divisive rhetoric surrounding it, be understood to provide an excuse for discrimination.” Reading those words today, I know now that, even worse than providing an excuse for discrimination, the law is itself discriminatory. It should be overturned.

We are still a young country, and many of our landmark civil rights decisions are fresh enough that the voices of their champions still echo, even as the world that preceded them becomes less and less familiar. We have yet to celebrate the centennial of the 19th Amendment, but a society that denied women the vote would seem to us now not unusual or old-fashioned but alien. I believe that in 2013 DOMA and opposition to marriage equality are vestiges of just such an unfamiliar society.

Americans have been at this sort of a crossroads often enough to recognize the right path. We understand that, while our laws may at times lag behind our best natures, in the end they catch up to our core values. One hundred fifty years ago, in the midst of the Civil War, President Abraham Lincoln concluded a message to Congress by posing the very question we face today: “It is not ‘Can any of us imagine better?’ but ‘Can we all do better ?’”

The answer is of course and always yes. In that spirit, I join with the Obama administration, the petitioner Edith Windsor , and the many other dedicated men and women who have engaged in this struggle for decades in urging the Supreme Court to overturn the Defense of Marriage Act.

Subject: one chain on DOMA

Think all of us are getting incoming from friends in LGBT community about DOMA comments.

HuffPo has reached out to us. I heard from Socarides that NYT was doing something.

I have no understanding of the issue – but clear this has a head of steam.

Brian can put a statement out, but policy and political need to tell us what you want us to do.

I would suggest a conference call with relevant parties for how we are going to handle all around – press, groups, politics. I have a bad schedule for rest of day and may not be able to be on such a call but don't think I am needed. We just need guidance and then on political end think we need a plan for how to hose down anxious friends.

Subject: Re: Earned Media Call

Here's the final text of the CHIP op ed.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, a Democrat, was secretary of state from 2009 to 2013, a senator from New York from 2001 to 2009 and first lady from 1993 to 2001. Bill Frist, a Republican, a surgeon and a businessman, was a senator from Tennessee from 1995 to 2007.

By Hillary Rodham Clinton and Bill Frist

NO child in America should be denied the chance to see a doctor when he or she needs one — but if Congress doesn't act soon, that's exactly what might happen.

For the past 18 years, the Children's Health Insurance Program has provided much-needed coverage to millions of American children. And yet, despite strong bipartisan support, we are concerned that gridlock in Washington and unrelated disputes over the Affordable Care Act could prevent an extension of the program. As parents, grandparents and former legislators, we believe that partisan politics should never stand between our kids and quality health care.

We may be from different political parties, but both of us have dedicated our careers to supporting the health of children and their families. This shared commitment inspired us to work together in the late 1990s to help create CHIP to address the needs of the two million children whose families make too much money to be covered by Medicaid, but cannot afford private insurance.

The resulting program, a compromise between Republicans and Democrats, disburses money to the states but gives them flexibility to tailor how they provide coverage to meet the needs of their own children and families. Some expanded Medicaid; others created separate programs. As a result, the number of uninsured children in America has dropped by half. Children miss less school because of illness or injury, and we've seen a significant decline in childhood mortality.

Today, state governments continue to rely on the program to meet crucial health and budget priorities. It's not surprising that every single governor who responded to a 2014 survey — 39 in all — supported saving CHIP.

Of course, the American health care landscape has changed significantly since CHIP started. Under the Affordable Care Act, many families with children are now receiving financial help to enroll in private health coverage through the new health insurance marketplace. But while it is possible that private, family-wide policies offered by employers and marketplaces may one day render CHIP unnecessary, for now substantial gaps still exist — and too many children can still fall through them.

One specific provision of the Affordable Care Act, often called the "family glitch," has been interpreted to prevent many families from receiving subsidized health coverage in the new marketplace if one parent is offered "affordable coverage" through his or her job. In this case, "affordable" is defined as less than roughly 9.5 percent of household income for that parent to sign up alone — even though the actual cost of available family coverage is far higher. For families affected by this glitch, CHIP may be the only affordable option for making sure their children are covered.

We already know what happens when CHIP is no longer an option for families. According to a recent report from the Georgetown University Health Policy Institute, as many as 14,000 children in Arizona lost their health insurance after 2010, when it became the only state to drop CHIP.

We don't want to see the same thing happen across the country. If CHIP is not reauthorized, more families will be hit with higher costs. As many as two million children could lose coverage altogether. Millions more will have fewer health care benefits and much higher out-of-pocket costs, threatening access to needed health services. And because families without adequate insurance often miss out on preventive care and instead receive more expensive treatment in hospital emergency rooms, all of us will be likely to end up paying part of the bill.

While reauthorization is not due until the end of September, Congress needs to act now. With more than four-fifths of state legislatures adjourning by the end of June, lack of action and clarity from Washington by then will make budgeting and planning virtually impossible.

Reauthorizing CHIP for the next four years would cost about $10 billion — an investment in our children that will pay off for decades to come. This is an opportunity to send a message that Washington is still capable of making common-sense progress for American families.

As 2015 unfolds, we know Congress will continue to debate the future of health care reform. We most likely won't see eye to eye about some of the more contentious questions. But one thing everyone should be able to agree on is that our most vulnerable children shouldn't be caught in the crossfire.

This isn't about politics. It's about our kids and our nation's future. What could be more important than that?

Quick agenda for today is below. One thing I would like to discuss is the rollout of HRC's women and girls initiative's progress report in the second week in March. The Foundation team has asked that we consider her doing some media. Something like an Ellen, either alone, with Chelsea, Melinda Gates, or both. This is not a must, and there are of course plenty of reasons why this might be something we simply pass on, but worth a discussion I think.

Talk to you all at 2pm. And (Philippe is) looking forward to those of you who are joining us via Skype.

Don't think we need a call. She is for a two-state solution and thinks the status quo is unsustainable. She had dozens of hours of convos with Bibi where he not only supported a two-state solution but actively negotiated to bring it about. We don't need to wade into Israeli politics but we should be clear and unabashed about our own position.

Hey Philippe LONG time.

How you doing? Been meaning to check in for awhile to see if you're up for coffee or a beer or something, so i can get your view of the world first-hand, since I'm surely going to have to know it sooner or later for some piece either dealing with HRC directly or indirectly. But while I have you, I'm pressing the R (likely) candidates on their positions on the two-state solution and figure I should make sure I take note of Secretary Clinton's, which I assume is not expected to change from "essential" ? <http://m.theweek.com/speedreads/440800/hillary-clinton-twostate-solution-israelipalestinian-conflict-essential-concept>

I received a note from Ken Bacon, former Pentagon spokesman. He relayed that Darcy Bacon, with whom you worked with Peter Hart in 1984, is volunteering to help during the transition. Darcy was until recently working for NPR and Mark Shields. He also says Jerry Jasinowski, former head of NAM, wants to help.

I remember Homestead well and thought it was a mistake at the time. I also worked on the resolution after the election! Apt analogy.

Refraining from taking a position hurt Al Gore on Homestead Air Force base. He declined to take a position for the same reason HRC did on the pipe line ; he initiated the review. Carol was unable to campaign for him in Florida as a result.

Carter Eskew would agree as far as I remember this ambiguity and nuance was not helpful either with swing voters or base voters.

As for the issue itself...Michael Bloomberg has made a proposal to approve the pipeline and institute our first carbon tax in conjunction with its approval. His argument is the crude is going to be shipped somewhere ., either west or south , and it might as well be south with a deal made to impose a carbon tax. As you know he is working closely with Steyer and Paulson and his idea might be a way to campaign on the idea of promoting a carbon tax, especially if the tax could be used to finance the half a billion solar panels.

For what it's worth.

 Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster conjugated

I have been corresponding with the White House for many Years beginnings as Early as Nine Eleven Horrendousness trying to avert such a recurrence by any feasible Technique According to my analysis a breakthrough advent has appeared with Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows:

2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation causing its Desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

- 1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
- 2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
- 3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
- 4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
- 5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
- 6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
- 7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
- 8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
- 9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
- 10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
- 11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
- 12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
- 13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
- 14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
- 15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
- 16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
- 17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?
- 18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health
- 19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity

10/18/2016

20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!

21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up

Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!

22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!

23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.

24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able indicating a monumental achievements, He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence

25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming

Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.

26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite

My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!

27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.

28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

John --

My mom, the girls, and I left home in Chicago and got to Denver yesterday. What a beautiful city!

The convention started this morning, and everyone here is getting ready for the big week.

All the work you've done is at the heart of what's happening here, and our team filmed a short video to give you a look behind the scenes at the convention center.

Take a minute to check out the video and share it with your friends:

<http://my.barackobama.com/behindthescenes>

This week, folks from across the country will get to know Barack and our family a little better. Tonight I'm giving a speech at the convention, and I'm planning to share a few stories about the Barack I know -- the husband, the father, and the man who shares my dreams for our girls, for this country, and for our future.

Before my speech, we're also going to show a video introducing our family to families across the country. Make sure to turn on your TV at 10:30 p.m. EDT (8:30 p.m. MDT) to see it, or you can watch it at www.BarackObama.com.

This is such an important moment, and I hope you'll join me by tuning into the convention tonight and all week long.

Thanks,

Michelle

Two things:

1. In the short term, we should come up with an alternative to pitch her.
2. Agree that long term, we have a big problem because our current strategy is unsustainable. Let's get a memo together explaining this. Then I think we present directly to WJC.

Bernie has a ton of grassroots support as we all know and see by his numbers. His participation in online fundraising and through contests can make a dramatic difference in helping us keep pace with him. Absent him we are def missing a huge opportunity.

Also - I have to say the last sentence from Tina is very alarming!!!!

is there a different way to package it so it's somehow more palatable (I know you didn't like her comment about suggesting a book for him to read etc) but somehow making the contest more around one of his interests,
I think we also need to be clear on what the 'win' means - NOT dinner w/WJC...but a quick handshake/photo-op somewhere backstage at an event.

she's concerned about too many/frequency of emails from WJC.
suggested we focus on locking in all the finance slots for December and Q1, and ease in to the digital piece.

Please let me know what you think about how to best move forward or answers to current outstanding pieces:

- As you know our top ask continues to be and is the contest. Tina - do you think there is any period of time where this would be possible? Or any more we can do to consider this?
- In addition, we have several fundraising emails from now through the end of the year that we would like to send from WJC as his emails are doing tremendous. Fundraising asks would center particularly around upcoming debates & the very end-of-quarter in December. If OK, we will calendar out the asks for the next couple weeks and come back to you.
- I did make a note to remove the merchandise request from the memo.
- I left all the "creative ideas" as well and it sounded like there may be interest in a Facebook Q&A or having WJC take over our Instagram platform for a day with pictures. Working with you on any of these ideas would be incredible, and happy to discuss how to best organize any that you would like to try.

The last piece is you had asked for a way to track results that we could keep updated. I created this google doc and just have the birthday email in here from yesterday currently but we could use this to build out and keep updated.

Results: https://docs.google.com/a/hillaryclinton.com/spreadsheets/d/1KJJg1c0BETB-\_mTwd5n2frTnryicPYedfkRtlJY-MZo/edit?usp=sharing

The birthday email has now raised $80K - and from an email that does not directly ask for money -- this is incredible!!!

Thanks for reading this far if you did! Let me know know what you think and if I missed anything in here. Cheers, Katie

Chris - Thanks so much for talking tonight and spearheading the effort to develop a broader set of policies aimed at strengthening the ACA, as well as policies that will drive down costs, foster innovation and reform our delivery of health care.

I do think the memo that you wrote on the United Healthcare situation is very good and should go to HRC. I have edited and reordered it to: (1) have her focus on the arguments about why not to panic too much about United Health Care at the beginning of the memo; and (2) left the background on why ACA needs to be strengthened to the end; and (3) I deleted your list of improvements at the end as I'd prefer for us to work on giving her a package together rather than a few ideas now.

If this works for you and Jake, Shapiro can clean it up and get it into HRC's briefing book.

Thanks again,
Ann

We are currently drafting a letter/memo to the 124 list of donors and will have a copy for your review today. After this is legally vetted and Board approved we will send tis out to the donors. Michael Vauchon has suggested not sending out a press statement but let the donor letter get out and serve as our notice. After that we will talk no additional press calls or make additional statements to the press.

An agreement was made by the Board yesterday to suspend fundraising activity at FFA effective immediately. The Fund will then pay down expenses and allocations until only $500,000 remains in the account as soon as possible (goal is latest by July 15th). After the 2008 election if no legal activity has occurred the $500,000 will be allocated to another 527 entity (for example DGA, or DLCC)

The internal memo you are receiving today will outline all the outstanding expenses and what allocations are made until there is $500,000 left in the account and any operational procedures that will need to occur.

At that time the current Board members will resign and it is recommended that Rob McKay (or a designated surrogate) will remain in a position of Treasurer for any accounting, legal, or other allocation decisions.

If this is not your understanding of what was decided today please alert Marc and I as soon as possible. This is the understanding and directive from the call today.

Advance Estimate of GDP for the Fourth Quarter of 2014

Posted by Jason Furman on January 30, 2015 at 09:30 AM EST

Economic growth in the fourth quarter was consistent with a broad range of other indicators showing solid improvement in the labor market, rising consumer sentiment, increasing domestic energy security, and continued low health cost growth. The combination of consumer spending and fixed investment grew at about the same strong pace as in the third quarter, while more volatile factors that elevated the overall growth rate in the third quarter subtracted from it in the fourth quarter. The President’s approach to middle-class economics, including the proposals he will release in his Budget on Monday, would build on this growth while helping to ensure that our recovery is widely shared with all American families.

FIVE KEY POINTS IN TODAY’S REPORT FROM THE BUREAU OF ECONOMIC ANALYSIS

1. Real gross domestic product (GDP) grew 2.6 percent at an annual rate in the fourth quarter of 2014, according to the advance estimate from the Bureau of Economic Analysis. The report reflects very strong consumption growth, continued increases in residential investment, weaker business investment after two quarters of strong growth, an unusually large decline in federal spending that reversed last quarter’s above-trend increase, and stronger imports, which while subtracting from GDP, partly reflect improved consumer sentiment. Overall, real GDP rose 2.5 percent versus the fourth quarter of 2013. Indeed, today’s report affirms the underlying pattern of resurgence in the economy.

2. Real personal consumption expenditures, which constitute more than two thirds of GDP, grew 4.3 percent at an annual rate in the fourth quarter — the fastest single quarter since 2006. Consumption growth continues to trend upward as consumers’ economic optimism has reached its highest monthly level since 2004 and real wages have begun to rise. Consumers cite improved expectations for employment and wage increases — along with declining gasoline prices — as major drivers of improved economic optimism, according to the Reuters/University of Michigan consumer sentiment survey. In line with broadly improved sentiment, consumption growth in the fourth quarter was broad-based. Services spending grew at its fastest pace in a year, while the recent high growth rate of durable goods spending persisted and nondurable goods spending grew at its fastest pace in nearly two years. Although consumer sentiment has improved on average, many households still have yet to participate fully in the recovery, and we have more work to do to boost wages for middle-class families.

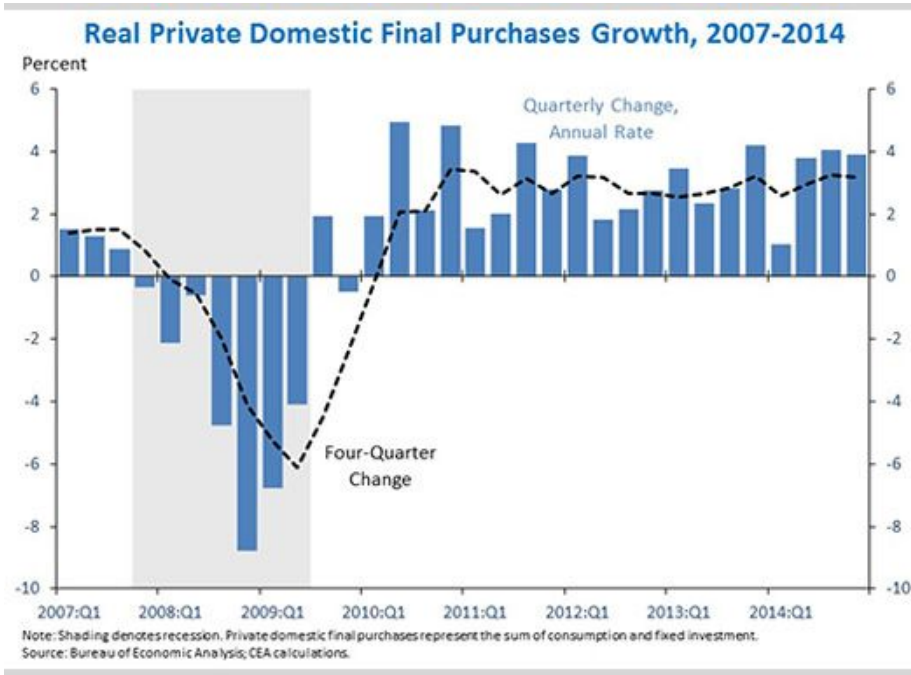

3. In the fourth quarter, falling oil prices reduced America’s petroleum import bill to its lowest share of GDP since 2009. Lower prices, higher domestic production, and lower domestic consumption reduce the amount of U.S. income that goes abroad to pay for oil, leaving U.S. households and businesses with more to consume and invest. Lower oil imports also reduce the vulnerability of the U.S. economy to oil price shocks stemming from international supply disruptions.

4. Despite the recent strength of U.S. growth, the global economy has slowed in recent quarters, which is contributing to the declines in oil prices, along with other factors. Weakness in global aggregate demand explains part of the oil decline, but it is unlikely to be the only contributor. Indeed, the decline in oil prices is comparable to that observed in 2008, even though unlike in 2008, the global economy has continued to record positive growth. Accordingly, expanded oil supply — including the growth in U.S. oil production and reduced U.S. consumption — has also contributed to declines in oil prices. But going forward, lower energy costs are likely to encourage short-term growth on a global basis and may help to mitigate the international slowdown. A continued slowdown in global growth would pose downside risks to U.S. net export growth.

5. Real private domestic final purchases (PDFP) — the sum of consumption and fixed investment — rose 3.9 percent at an annual rate in the fourth quarter. PDFP growth in the fourth quarter was largely on par with PDFP growth in the third quarter, which was only 0.2 percentage points higher at an annual rate. Real PDFP growth is generally a more stable and forward-looking indicator than real GDP because it excludes volatile components like inventory investment, net exports, and government spending. The entire fourth-quarter deceleration in real GDP can be attributed to two of these volatile categories, net exports and government spending — two categories that boosted real GDP in the third quarter. As such, the underlying trends driving the economy's performance were quite similar in the third and fourth quarters. Over the past four quarters, PDFP has risen at a 3.2 percent annual rate, a faster pace than real GDP.

As the Administration stresses every quarter, GDP figures can be volatile and are subject to substantial revision. Therefore, it is important not to read too much into any one single report and it is informative to consider each report in the context of other data that are becoming available.

John --

I've heard a lot from supporters about Syria over the last week. This debate is an important one for our country.

For everyone asking for more information, I wanted to make sure you had the chance to hear from President Obama himself.

He's addressing the nation tonight -- you can watch it live here at 9:00 p.m. Eastern Time:

There's a lot to do to pass the agenda Americans voted for last fall -- that's work that we'll remain focused on. More on that soon.

For now, thank you for everything you do.

Subject: 60 Minutes on Data Brokers

Hi John,

Happy Weekend to the Podesta gang. Hope you all had a very good one.

Did you happen to see 60 Minutes on data brokers this eve? Pretty unreal and unsettling. It would be great for your WH team to watch it.

And I'm sure that the public would be more than outraged if they knew this was the reality with data brokers and some of the leading tech cos.

How do you think we should best address this concern? And how best to deal with this as part of the Big Data effort being undertaken?

I look forward to seeing you soon and discussing options.

All best as always from the Steyer fam.

Jim

Subject: Earth Day deadline: Add your name!

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John:

As we prepare to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Earth Day tomorrow, we are also getting ready to send a loud message to our leaders that we can no longer wait for a clean energy future.

LCV has partnered with a broad coalition of organizations to gather signatures from concerned citizens who demand energy independence and a cleaner planet.

Will you add your name and send a strong message to your Senators that they must take action this year?

Click here to sign the Earth Day Declaration of Energy Independence petition now!

A clean energy future means reduced global warming pollution, less dependence on foreign oil, increased security, and millions of new clean energy jobs that can't be shipped overseas. The Senate can make this a reality by passing a strong bill this year. But we can't afford to wait any longer.

We must send a message to Washington that they can't ignore. Please, help us make this Earth Day the biggest one yet.

Sign the Earth Day Declaration of Energy Independence today to add your voice.

Thank you for your support.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski

Subject: Aggressive and Innovative

Dear Friend --

I'm running for Mayor to lead Los Angeles and help it become the great city we all know it can be. Using the Mayor's direct authority over city departments, I look forward to quickly implementing innovations that will make an immediate difference to our economy and our public services.

As your Mayor, I will be aggressive and innovative about job creation and efficiency. The status quo at city hall is too slow to embrace creative solutions. Yesterday, I took matters into my own hands and partnered with a leading tech company to facilitate job creation.

Check out this story from today's Daily News, and please pass it along:

ERIC GARCETTI STARTS ONE-STOP SERVICE FOR PERMIT INFORMATION

By Rick Orlov, Staff Writer

Gone are the days when someone can come up with an idea for a new business, rent a storefront and open to the public.

Instead, what they will hear is: You need a license for that. And, often, it is more than one license or permit needed to open in the city of Los Angeles.

Collaborating with a web-based company, Councilman Eric Garcetti on Wednesday launched a new service available at his website, cd13.com, where potential businesses can find out all the permits and licenses needed for everything from offering a service like accounting to opening a bar or restaurant.

"This is making use of modern technology to get information out to businesses," said Garcetti, who is running for mayor next year and learned about the service provided by License123.com in his role as chairman of the Jobs and Business Development Committee.

"I want people to know that L.A. is open for business and we can help them find out what permits they need."

The site also offers printable versions of the forms needed and the contact information for the agencies.

"We need to be more aggressive and innovative about creating jobs," Garcetti said.

License123 was created by Jason Nazar and began operations this year as part of the Docstoc company.

Its goal is to have information for all 50 states but has the most information available for California. In Los Angeles, it includes information on all permits and licenses needed from the city, county, state and federal governments.

Garcetti said some of the agencies can take in applications electronically but many still require the filing of forms.

"Our goal at the city is to have all agencies working electronically," Garcetti said. "What we are trying to do is provide a central location for businesses."

Garcetti has an agreement with License123, which normally charges $49.95 per firm, to provide the information at no cost to any business in any part of the city that uses his website. Garcetti has budgeted $25,000 for the initial effort.

Thank you.

Maybe the way to deal with Joel's concern about Basta -- is to say it in English first.

Dan, I know time is tight. So just two quick notes.

1. When she does the value of fixing the immigration system: "Fixing our broken immigration system would lower the likelihood of exploitation and suppressed wages – and potentially create billions of dollars in additional tax revenue. And the positive effects will ripple out across our economy. "

I would add for emphasis at the end: And the positive effects will ripple out across our economy, benefiting everyone in the nation.

2. She better practice Basta or it's gonna sound like... "I have one word for you: bastard! "

As long as I can count on you to be a part of this, we will find a way to make progress on all of it -- continuing to create good-paying jobs, fixing our broken immigration system, finding a common-sense way to reduce gun violence in this country, and more.

No president can do it alone.

Subject: Today's GDP data

Please find below CEA’s analysis of today’s data on GDP.

Advance Estimate of GDP for the First Quarter of 2014

Posted by Jason Furman on April 30, 2014 at 9:58 AM

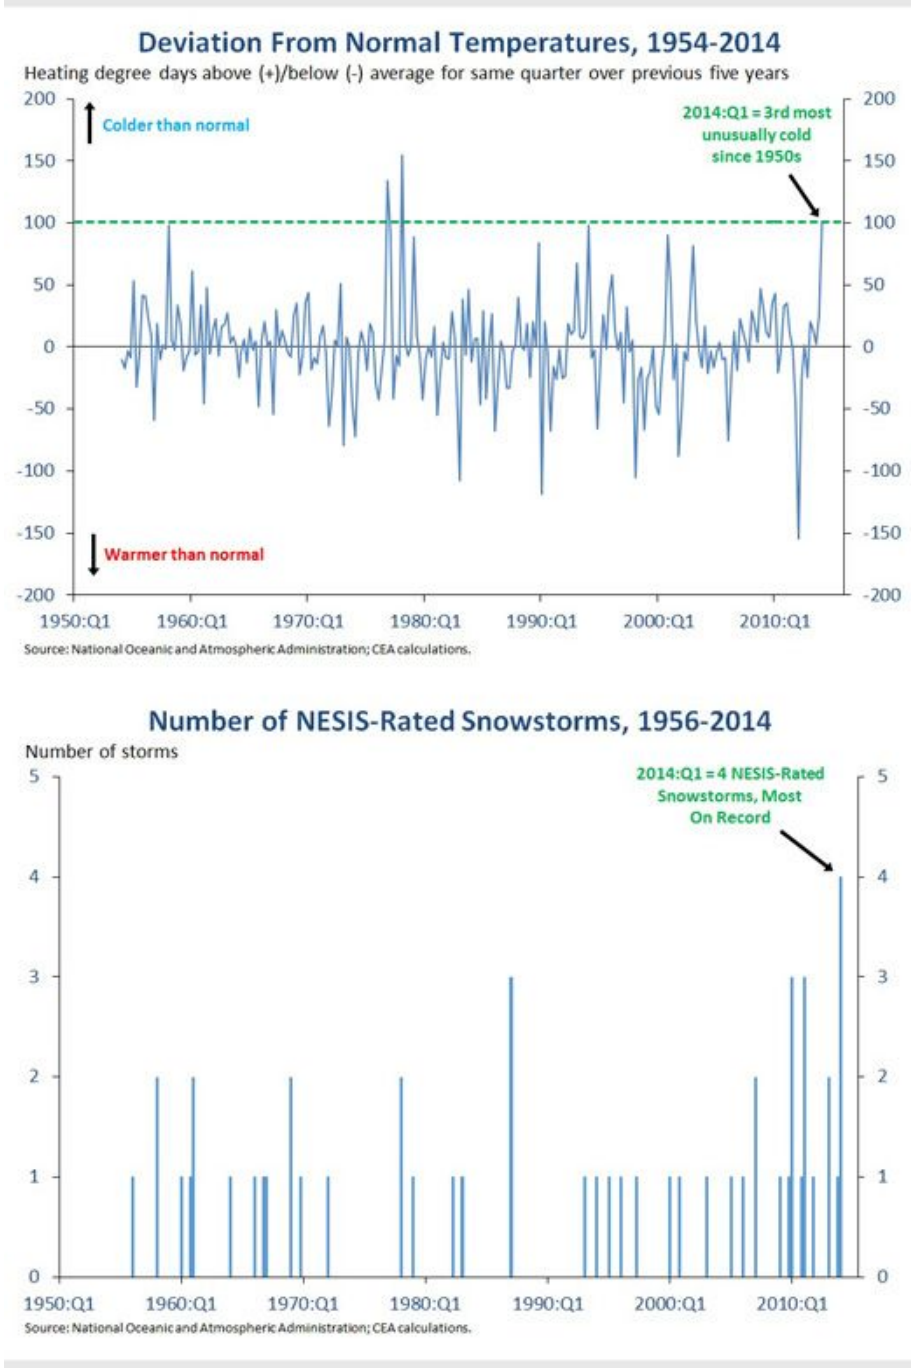

Today’s GDP estimate is subject to a number of notable influences, including historically severe winter weather, which temporarily lowered growth in the first quarter. The report also shows the positive impact of the implementation of the Affordable Care Act which, together with continued slowing in health costs, helped strengthen the economy in the first quarter. The President will do everything he can either by acting through executive action or by working with Congress to push for steps that would raise growth and accelerate job creation, including fully paid-for investments in infrastructure, education and research, a reinstatement of extended unemployment insurance benefits, and an increase in the minimum wage.

FIVE KEY POINTS IN TODAY’S REPORT FROM THE BUREAU OF ECONOMIC ANALYSIS

1. Real gross domestic product (GDP) rose 0.1 percent at an annual rate in the first quarter of 2014, following the 3.4 percent annual pace in the second half of 2013. Looking at the various components of GDP, consumer spending grew at a rapid pace, mainly reflecting sharp increases in health care and utilities consumption, while the other elements of consumer spending on net rose only slightly. Consumer spending on food services and accommodations fell for the first time in four years, one of several components that was likely affected by unusually severe winter weather. Exports and inventory investment, two particularly volatile components of GDP, also subtracted from growth.

2. The first quarter of 2014 was marked by unusually severe winter weather, including record cold temperatures and snowstorms, which explains part of the difference in GDP growth relative to previous quarters. The left chart shows the quarterly deviation in heating degree days from its average for the same quarter over the previous five years. By this measure, the first quarter of 2014 was the third most unusually cold quarter over the last sixty years, behind only the first quarter of 1978 and the fourth quarter of 1976. In addition, there were four storms in the first quarter that rated on the Northeast Snowfall Impact Scale (NESIS). The right chart shows that no quarter going back to 1956 had more than three such storms.

3. Within the first quarter, several key indicators were lower in January and/or February before rebounding strongly in March, suggesting that the severe weather had a disruptive effect that only began to abate at the end of the quarter. Light vehicle sales, average weekly hours, core retail and food service sales, and core capital goods shipments dipped starting in December and/or January before bouncing back in March, and so were left little changed for the quarter as a whole. One outside group has estimated that the elevated snowfall in the first quarter slowed the annual rate of GDP growth by 1.4 percentage points, with all of that lost activity to be made up in the second quarter.

Additionally, it is worth noting that consumer spending on utilities surged more than 38 percent at an annual rate in the first quarter, the largest increase on record (with data back to 1959). While this weather-related jump in utilities spending added to GDP growth, it was likely more than offset by the constraining effect of severe weather on other categories, including other components of consumer spending (like autos, household furnishings, and restaurants), some components of private and public fixed investment, and exports.

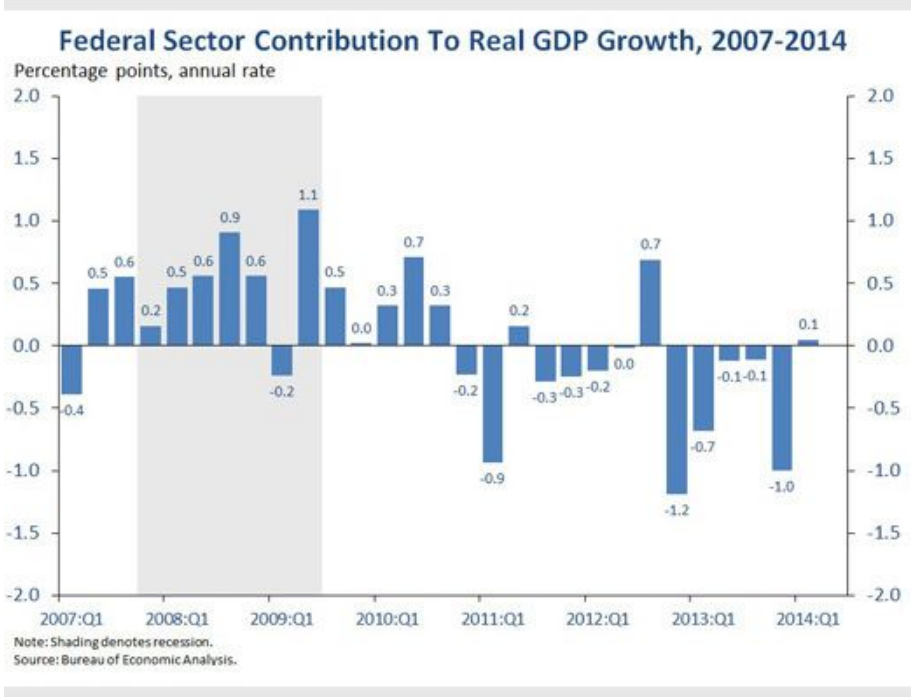

4. The federal sector made a small positive contribution to growth for the first time in over a year, in part because the effect of the shutdown in the fourth quarter reversed. The Bureau of Economic Analysis (BEA) reported that in the fourth quarter, federal worker furloughs resulting from the government shutdown directly reduced GDP growth by 0.3 percentage point at an annual rate; other effects of the shutdown (including reduced government purchases of goods and services) also likely contributed to the large 1.0 percentage point negative contribution from the federal government.

In the first quarter of 2014, the federal sector made a small (0.05) percentage point positive contribution to growth, in part due to the return to a full quarter of undisrupted federal employee work hours. Federal spending is subject to a number of influences, including the winding down of overseas military operations, the withdrawal of temporary support measures enacted earlier in the recovery, and in 2013, the sequester. The budget agreement reached late last year should create a more neutral fiscal climate in 2014 than in 2013, and while there is still a need to do more to invest in growth, the reduced fiscal drag is a key reason that outside forecasters expect growth to strengthen over the remainder of the year.

5. Health care prices continued to increase exceptionally slowly, growing at an annual rate of just 0.5 percent (0.9 percent on a year-over-year basis), while utilization (real health care spending) rose at a 9.9 percent annual rate in the first quarter. It is important to note that the main survey BEA uses to track health care spending will not report first-quarter estimates until June, and the expansion of insurance coverage under the Affordable Care Act during the first quarter complicates the interpretation of other available data. For this reason, today's estimates could be revised significantly. If anything, however, the details of today's report suggest that the underlying cost trends in the health sector remain favorable. The sharp increase in estimated utilization appears to have been driven by greater use of health care services by people who gained insurance coverage during the first quarter because of the Affordable Care Act. Ensuring access to care is a key goal of the Affordable Care Act's coverage expansion, so this increase in utilization is neither a surprise, nor a cause for concern. Furthermore, any upward pressure on health care spending growth from expanding insurance coverage will cease once coverage stabilizes at its new, higher level, so it does not affect the longer-term outlook for spending growth.

Meanwhile, consumers continued to benefit from very slow growth in health care prices, a trend that actually deepened during the first quarter and which is attributable in part to reforms made in the Affordable Care Act. Slower growth in health care prices drives slower growth in families' out-of-pocket costs and insurance premiums and has been an important contributor to the overall slow growth in health care spending seen over the last few years.

As the Administration stresses every quarter, GDP figures can be volatile and are subject to substantial revision. Therefore, it is important not to read too much into any one single report and it is informative to consider each report in the context of other data that are becoming available.

Aniello:

I've just learned that Republicans in the Wisconsin Senate have devised a plan to ram through Governor Walker's so-called "budget repair" bill that will strip away collective bargaining rights for public employees.

The vote is happening TONIGHT at 6pm at the Capitol, and we need you to be there!

Here's the breaking story from the Wisconsin State Journal: http://host.madison.com/wsj/news/local/govt-and-politics/article\_8747fa04-4a74-11e0-8e6b-001cc4c03286.html

We need to keep up our fight for Wisconsin, please go to the Capitol RIGHT NOW if you are able to demonstrate against this unprecedented assault on working families.

See you at the Capitol in twenty minutes!

MEMORANDUM

Date: April 29, 2015

To: Center for American Progress Board of Directors

From: Neera Tanden, President

Re: Recommendation to Appoint Donald Sussman to the Board

---

Recommendation for Board Action

I write to strongly recommend that the board re-appoint Donald Sussman to the CAP Board of Directors. Many of you know Donald from his previous service on the CAP Board and from his dedicated work in progressive politics and philanthropy. Donald served as a valued CAP director from May 2009 to May 2012, when he resigned from all boards in order to demonstrate his commitment to an independent news source as a new owner of Maine Today Media.

Now, he is in a position to rejoin. Donald has also had a long and distinguished career in finance. Significantly, he has never stopped being part of the American Progress family and I am confident that his perspective and commitment will be an important part of advancing our work. If appointed, he will participate in the spring meeting on May 26, 2015.

If you agree with my recommendation, please (1) email Alex DeMots to let him know at your earliest convenience at ademots@americanprogress.org , and (2) print and sign the attached proposed Unanimous Consent and return it to Alex via facsimile (202-315-0453 ) or as a pdf via email.

Alternatively, if you would like to discuss this recommendation, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Thank you for your consideration.

Bringing Emerging Technologies into Legacy Sectors: Examples from Europe and the U.S.

Major legacy sectors – such as energy, transport and manufacturing – make up over half of the economy and are often in need of “disruptive innovations” with the potential to generate economic growth and employment. In their new book, authors William Bonvillian and Charles Weiss identify the shared features and underlying obstacles to innovation in these sectors and ways to overcome them. The authors will discuss legacy sectors as a global problem, detailing legacy challenges in European economies – particularly Germany and France – in comparison to those in the U.S. and other parts of the world.

Subject: They're nervous

Friend,

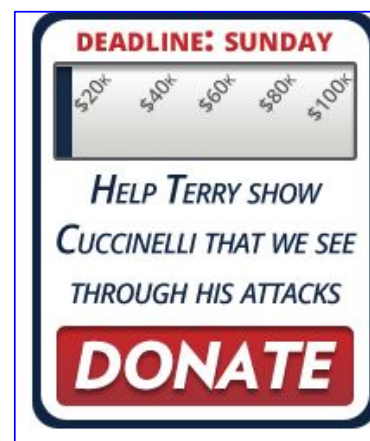

I think my opponent's campaign might be a little bit nervous.

After you helped outraise them last fundraising deadline, they've been on the attack — slinging mud at me and trying to tear down the movement we're building together.

I'm tough. I can take the attacks.

But this week I'm facing something I can't take on myself — Sunday night is our next important fundraising deadline and we need to raise $100,000 before midnight to prove that my opponent's attacks aren't changing minds.

Will you donate \$5 to help me hit that goal — and prove Ken Cuccinelli's attacks just won't stick?

My opponent's campaign is throwing attack after attack so that everyone's too distracted to take a real look at his record.

That's a smart strategy — if you don't think you can win on the issues.

But I know Virginia voters are smarter. And I have no doubt we'll come out on top on Election Day because they'll see the very clear contrast on education, transportation, and women's health care — and they want a Governor who'll put jobs first.

Let's show Ken Cuccinelli that we see through his attacks — and together we're going to make sure voters do too. Donate $5 to help us raise $100,000 before Sunday's fundraising deadline:

Hello CAP friends-

As some of you may know, Christine will be leaving CAP after 8 amazing rockstar years to run events at EMILY's List.

As we deal with the impact of losing such a long-tenured and on-point CAPer, we're also trying to make sure to send her off in style.

That's where you all can help me!

Christine has been an invaluable asset to CAP, and has planned and executed stellar events for your respective teams for years, in addition to planning CAP-wide events like the holiday party and this year's Progressive Party. Marlene and I are collecting donations to get Christine an appropriately-kick-ass going away gift, and if you're so inclined, any donations to that cause would be appreciated (either come find me at my desk or just email me and I'll come to you!) We'd like all donations by COB Tuesday to give Marlene time to pick up a gift.

Additionally, we are putting together a book with memories, good luck messages and photos of Christine. If you like, please send Adriane at AAlicea@americanprogress.org, a photo you want to include of Christine or a favorite memory you have of her or a message wishing her well.

Examples:

Remember the time you saved my entire event when our speaker didn't show up...
Can't wait to see what you will do in your next adventure!

In order to include it in the book we will need to receive it by Monday May 25th at 6:00 PM.

Please feel free to pass this on to other members of your respective teams who've experienced the amazingness that is Christine McDonough. Thank you all in advance!!

(An all-staff email will go out from Marlene announcing info about her send-off celebration at a later date)

Subject: [big campaign] Kingston Wants To Privatize SS and Medicare

VIDEO: TO 'CUT' THE 'ENTITLEMENT MENTALITY,' REP. KINGSTON TOUTS PRIVATIZING SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE.

<http://thinkprogress.org/2010/02/11/kingston-privatize-entitlements/>

In the past two weeks, Republican lawmakers have revived the prospect of privatizing Social Security and Medicare, starting with a push from Rep. Paul Ryan (R-WI), whose budget proposal radically slashes and privatizes the entitlement programs. On Tuesday night, Rep. Jack Kingston (R-GA) went on Fox Business to lend his voice to the campaign. Kingston said to "cut...programs that are expanding the entitlement mentality," we should privatize both Social Security and Medicare:

KINGSTON: We need to go in, and we need to cut duplicate programs, programs that are inefficient, programs that are expanding the entitlement mentality. I think we should go back to Social Security, take it off budget, dedicate the funds, put personal accounts on it. On Medicare, I think something like vouchers, where people actually have an incentive to save money.

Watch it:

If President Bush had been successful privatizing Social Security, an October 2008 retiree would have lost $26,000 in the market plunge. Indeed, as a Center for American Progress report has found, if the U.S. stock market had behaved like the Japanese market during the duration of that retiree's work life, "a private account would have experienced sharp negative returns, losing $70,000 — an effective — 3.3 percent net annual rate of return." And a Wonk Room analysis of the recent Medicare privatization plan by Sen. Kit Bond (R-MO) found that such an arrangement would shift the cost of insurance from the government to the individual, particularly lower-income beneficiaries. Nevertheless, Republicans, along with their Wall Street allies, are pressing forward to fight again to dismember popular, effective entitlement programs.

Two more things to add:

We did a radio interview with Greg and the morning buzz. Like the first local NH hit this morning, it was all about NH and allowed her to talk about how grateful she is to the people here.

Also just did a 10 minute satellite hit with Al Sharpton. They talked about heading to Nevada and her strategy there, he asked her how she would distinguish the civil rights record, then Flint, millennial women, voting rights, and a question about Cruz's comments on Flint and Katrina both being cities with crisis and two very liberal mayors. She didn't engage most of the answer and at the end said "that's not the world I live in, and not the world I'd govern as President."

Strong interview in substance and tone.

Transcripts to follow.

Then off to Dover. Another great showing by the organizing team, as well as by Carly Fiorina's husband, who greeted the Secretary enthusiastically. You'd never know his wife calls for HRC's imprisonment on a daily basis.

Just got back to Manchester.

HRC arrived to volunteers chanting "I believe that she will win!" and worked the crowd. She shook about 75 hands and took lots of photos, and then did an impromptu stand up with the morning show anchors. They asked her about how she's feeling and expectations, she just talked about how excited she was to be out talking to people and her love for New Hampshire.

We took a few more photos and talked to WMUR for a few minutes, which will air at noon.

Now we're in Nashua now headed to another location and on the phone live with Mike Pomp of WTSN radio. Good conversation, she's talking about her experiences up here, basically a perfect Election Day drive time interview.

More to come.

Dan O'Neil, former Dodd and O'Malley supporter but '92 Clinton supporter joined them for omelettes. Following breakfast, some more selfie-taking ensued as did a conversation with a couple of vets. Restaurant felt overwhelmingly supportive.

We went back to the hotel and taped 6 TV interviews with local and Boston affiliates. Lots about the state of the race here and the weather. Most asked about Warren which she handled well, a couple of transcripts questions and a good exchange with FOX on sexism in politics.

From there we went to Manchester Community College. Crowd of about 1100, she did a few things differently, including calling Bernie out for accepting DSCC money that came in part from Wall Street.

We taped Rachel Maddow after the event. It opened with the staffing question and then covered the waterfront...Flint, trust, attacks, transcripts. We let it go so Rachel would spend more time on the positive which she did.

After Maddow we went to the Velcro factory. She went table to table in their cafeteria which looked like a Johnny Rockets, shaking hands, sometimes sitting down for brief conversations. Press pool got some good stuff.

We're now back at the Radisson waiting to depart for WMUR where we'll do a quick live hit on WMUR, she'll simply make a one minute pitch to voters direct to camera.

The crowd was extraordinarily supportive. Her remarks were brief (12/15) but strong, with powerful response.

Afterwards she took photos, she did a very quick local standup in the sanctuary (all about Flint), met with a group of local pastors and went into the stakeholders/electeds meeting with the mayor.

On the way to the airport we called the editor of the National Newspaper Association, quick 5 minute interview on the importance of Flint and their being many other Flints. Transcript to follow.

Host: Let me ask you about a couple of headlines, this is from the Washington Post it's environmental groups questioning the president's commitment to climate change saying he needs to be more aggressive on some of these issues and there's this from John Podesta who is questioning why environmentalists would challenge the president energy strategy. He was brought on board earlier this year he is the former head of the Center for American Progress. What's your take on his role and what he represents?

Gene: Well, you know John's a longtime dear friend of mine we went to school down the street at Georgetown law school together. He's a great addition to the administration he cares deeply and passionately about the climate change issue and a whole host of issues that he worked on at the Center for American Progress. And most importantly he knows how to work, probably better than anyone in this town, he knows how to work the levers of the executive branch going back to when he was Chief of Staff for President Clinton, to get the job done cause as we saw President Obama say and again he made some very strong remarks on climate change in the State of the Union address and we appreciate that and we applaud it. But he made clear that getting, solutions through this Congress on climate change or on many other issues, is very very very difficult, therefore let's use the existing authority that the Environmental Protection Agency has with the clean air act, the Interior Department has to set up new monuments, the Department of Energy has to set up new standards. Use the leverage the government that Congress gave to the EPA and to the Interior Department and the Energy Department to make progress, and John is the perfect person, to be in the White House at this point who understands how to use executive branch to do the job it's supposed to do to make progress on issues that he cares about and he cares deeply about the climate change issue he knows it well he studied it, and he's a great addition to the White House staff.

Host: Okay well let me follow up though on this because in the letter he said with reference with environmental groups the president has been leading the transition to low carbon energy sources and understands the need to consider a balanced approach, to the all forms of energy development including oil and gas production. Clearly he would have written this letter if he didn't think he was getting pressure from your organization and others. Are you putting pressure on him?

Gene: Well I think what the letter signaled is that, there's some key questions outstanding one of which we discussed two of which we've already discussed. The issue of the pipeline, the Keystone pipeline, the issue of what are we going to do about natural gas and they specifically reference in the letter saying...and we agree John with the president in particular, we've made a lot of progress. But we're flagging this concern that we can't...and we need to continue to make progress as we make that progress we can't take some big steps backwards so it's just, there's nothing in the letter frankly that we haven't already said in other ways before. But it just sharpens some big decisions, in front of us and we wanted to make sure it was clearly out there that, while president has we agree with everything John's said in his letter, while the president has made major progress on cutting pollution from automobiles. The EPA's in the middle of a historic effort to cut carbon pollution from power plants, that's hugely important. So those are big steps forward but let's make sure we don't take big steps backwards at the same time, and things like the pipeline, the Keystone pipeline are examples of that.

Host: So let me follow up one other point this is from Politico how John Podesta is changing Obama's White House from your standpoint on environmental issues. Give me one example, one executive order that you want John Podesta to give to the president to have him sign.

Gene: Well it's not an executive order but it's an agency action. And here's the most important piece, the EPA is in the middle of the process, deciding to cut carbon pollution right now from new plants. And on June 1st the president in his great climate action plan that he announced last June June 25th, said EPA you have on June 1st, announce a plan to cut carbon pollution from existing power plants. That's the single biggest step this administration can take, in its second term, to make major impact. And John is in the middle and we'll be in the middle of that conversation, with EPA with other agencies so that on June 1st when they announce the new proposal, that will be a hugely important signal of the right direction to take in terms of cutting. That's the single biggest piece, that can happen.

Subject: It's official:

Friend,

It's official: We just submitted 3,000 signatures, the maximum allowed by law, from all of Ohio's 88 counties to the Secretary of State's office. Ted's name is on the 2016 ballot.

Make no mistake, now that the campaign is official the attacks are going to come fast, and they're going to be intense. This is the most important Senate race in the country. Period. It's the only toss-up race in a purple state so you better believe that the Republicans, and their dark money, will stop at nothing to tear us down.

We can't let that happen. Not at this pivotal moment for our campaign. So our campaign has set our boldest goal yet: raise $1,000,000 online from grassroots supporters like you before the end of the year.

Be a part of this historic moment and chip in now for Ted:

If you've saved payment info with ActBlue Express, your donation will go through immediately.

This is a big moment: 3,000 signatures from all 88 counties, coupled with our infusion of grassroots online support, this is an organizing show of force! Now we need your help to raise a million dollars before 2016.

Thanks for helping us keep the momentum going.

Team Ted

Subject: RE: Courts Listen: Will You Stand Up and Be Heard?

"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free"

John --

I'm writing this reminder because this is important. Whatever you did on the Fourth of July, you'll recognize the quote above. It is a testament to an enduring truth: the American Dream has never solely applied to citizens of the United States. It applies to anyone who dares to believe that they can build a better life and future for themselves and their family. That's what makes this the greatest country on earth.

But now, as the dreams of five million hard-working immigrants are put on hold, our country needs you to stand up for one of our most important ideals.

When the Texas court halted the President's executive order on immigration, it threatened the livelihoods and the future of millions who hold out hope in the promise of the American Dream. These are families -- often children -- who have spent years building lives and strengthening communities in the United States.

Stand up for our neighbors and our families. Add your name to our list of supporters who believe in the promise of the American Dream.

Thank you for all you do.

page 3 why would we say proud to have served "with" President Obama rather than served President Obama. Seems like she's elevating herself to equal status. Her service to him is one of her strongest attributes in our polling

On page 5 instead of too little investments in new businesses, jobs and fair compensation, what about businesses, jobs and the backbone of their companies--their workers.
Fair Compensation doesn't seem like an investment to me.

On page 7 infrastructure bank. The order seems a little past versus future.
How about finance world class airports, railways, roads, bridges and ports...

On page 11 re Bush's comments on hours, I'd delete "or long enough" and just stick with aren't working hard enough. Takes away their defense on part time workers.

On page 17 why don't we change threats emerging from Greece and elsewhere in recent weeks to Greece and China in recent weeks. Elsewhere sounds like you mean PR, but we're afraid to say so, and it would be good to reference China in a mildly negative way in this speech.

That's it. Great job.

Cheryl/John - hope you guys are well.

As you know, Wally backed out. Angie just let me know she can't do it for very understandable family reasons. Maya still wants to do it and I would be more than fine with that. So the question is, could HRC get comfortable?

If not, I've got to go back to the drawing board and it probably won't involve a person of color.

遭起訴後 陳水扁13日凌晨在地院當庭釋放

中央廣播電臺 更新日期:2008/12/13 05:45 呂采千

遭羈押超過一個月的前總統陳水扁，在13日凌晨1時左右被台北地方法院裁示當庭釋放，沒有保釋金，但限制住居、出境及出海，聽到這消息，支持者立即報以歡呼聲，陳水扁感謝許多人的支持、聲援，陪他度過難熬的牢獄日子，他隨後在家人接送下離開法院，支持者還在他住家前準備了火爐、豬腳麵線等來為他去霉氣及並歡迎他重享自由的空氣。

陳前總統12日晚上從台北看守所被移送至台北地方法院時，可看出他的臉頰瘦了，頭髮變長了，當他步入法庭時，先轉頭向後面聽眾點頭致意，此時，法官關切地詢問他身體狀況，陳水扁回應還不錯，不過，他沙啞、低緩的聲調，讓人感到他身體微恙，然而，隨著與檢方展開是否該續押的攻防戰時，陳前總統則愈辯愈激昂。

公訴及特偵組檢察官陳述，陳前總統對台灣社會具有影響力，並且涉及多起本刑5年以上重罪，還可能勾串證人，甚至有脅迫證人之虞，進而影響到未來案情的審理，因此要求不得釋放，但陳水扁力主自己無罪。

陳水扁表示，馬英九總統的台北市長特別費案，法院認為支出大於收入，因而認定沒有貪污，同樣他使用國務費也是如此，為何馬總統無罪，他就有罪，令他沒有辦法接受。

陳水扁還拿前總統李登輝、現任馬總統來做比較，他說，「我敢說他們兩個不會比我還清」。談到了其它案情，他也一概撇清，力陳清白。

最後，法官認為他沒有串供、逃亡之虞，因此裁定當庭釋放。聽到這個訊息，支持者及陳水扁的律師無不額首稱慶，拍手叫好。

經過半個多小時整理門面，陳前總統穿上家人帶來的皮鞋，西裝上繫了領帶，頭髮還抹了髮油，精神狀況看起來顯得好多了，他感謝法院、律師、民進黨同志以及所有的支持者對他的關心，陳水扁說：『承蒙各位的關心、聲援跟照顧，讓我能夠在獄中度過，最辛苦、也是最孤獨的32天。』

陳水扁最後表示，未來會再找機會向關心他的鄉親朋友做進一步報告。隨即他即坐車離去，返回住家。

Subject: Meet Our New Commissioner: Val Arkoosh

Dear Friend:

My former colleague on the Montgomery County Board of Commissioners, Leslie Richards was recently tapped by Gov. Wolf to be in his Cabinet. Leslie was a valuable partner here in Montgomery County and I am thrilled for her that she now has the chance to serve the people of Pennsylvania in such an important role.

Under state law, the vacancy is to be filled by a vote of the county Board of Judges who sought my recommendation for Leslie's successor. My criteria for who I thought should be the new Commissioner was threefold—someone who is prepared to govern today, has the political skills to keep the job tomorrow and help lead our county and the Democratic party into the future.

One name stood out—Dr. Val Arkoosh.

After weeks of careful consideration the Montgomery County Democratic party and I recommended Val to the judges and they unanimously voted to make her our new county commissioner this week.

Val is a longtime resident of Montgomery County with an educational background in medicine, public health, and economics. She is a nationally-recognized public health expert who has been engaged in policy development across all levels of government during her career. She has served as Chair of Anesthesiology and Interim Chair of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at the Drexel University College of Medicine and has most recently been a Professor of Clinical Anesthesiology and Obstetrics and Gynecology at the Perelman School of Medicine of the University of Pennsylvania.

Val is no stranger to Montgomery County government. After our historic 2011 election where we Democrats won control of county government for the first time in 150 years, Val played a leadership role on the Shapiro/Richards Transition Team as the co-chair of the Health and Human Services Subcommittee. Her efforts helped craft many of the transformative changes we have made during our Administration. After that, Val was unanimously selected by the Commissioners to Chair our County Board of Health where she served with distinction.

I believe Val's experience and dedication will help us build on the significant progress we have made for Montgomery County over the past three years. Val shares my commitment for a better Montgomery County and a stronger Pennsylvania for everyone, which is why I'm looking forward to governing with her and running together for reelection later this year.

You can help me welcome and congratulate Val by joining us at a free reception on Tuesday, February 3 from 5:30 – 7:30pm at the Flourtown Country Club. Please click here to RSVP.

As always, I welcome your feedback.

All the best,

Josh

Hello, John!

I hope this note finds you exceptionally well :). I wanted to drop a line to say how delightful it was to see you at Chris Kelly's home this past Wednesday evening for the Hillary for America event in Atherton CA - - what a great experience! I am so happy that I am getting to know you, as I have heard such lovely things about you for so many years from Neera (Tanden) and so many others. I have, also, attached the photo which I took with you from April 2014 at the State Dinner with President Hollande. And, one of Neera and I (to make you smile!).

I look forward to remaining in touch!

Clare,

Building on your paper and our original concept note, we've adapted our original paper significantly to map out a strategic program with both an urgent component but also laying out an arc for a 2 year period. I've intentionally drawn on some of the language you used to frame the issues. I'd welcome your feedback. Fred will be discussing the initiative with Stephen Heintz in NY to follow up.

Many thanks,

Damon

Subject: Re: RBF/AC process for the visit

Clare,

Great. Thanks for this. We're tracking.

First, we are keen to confirm a pre-visit VTC with Ghani; Fred sent the same message when we saw him in Munich and afterward. The sooner we can lock in a date for that, we can get things moving. Let us know if you hear back and we'll do the same.

Second, we pulled together this group below based on Ghani's suggestions that we include former Commanders, Ambos and strategists – as folks who might sign on to the report we produce to underscore that the entire US team who has worked on AFG supports the approach – and something the admin would have to take seriously. Your list includes many others who work AFG but we did not list – I'd be fine inviting them to the VTC as well (Fred Starr, Dan Feldman, Barno, Craig, Reidel, etc). Stirkes me inclusive is best for our goal to change the narrative and get buy in. We may want a more restricted group in any small setting with Ghani.

Third, I like your concept note. We'd of course like to expand on a pre-visit effort with a major push over 12-24 months. So we'll build on your concept for a longer-term concept note which we can discuss with Steve Heinz. Fred will see him again Friday and I'll be talking to him briefly but on another matter this afternoon.

Yes, USIP is convening an organizational meeting for his appearance (with our events and comms teams but not me) and we should also have a substantive discussion with Scott, Andrew, you, Bharath, me, etc.

Thanks,

Damon

Dear Damon,

It was good to catch up on Friday.

As promised, I'm attaching the concept note that the RBF team had prepared after Scott and my meeting with Stephen a couple of weeks ago, for a consultation process ahead of the visit. I'm speaking with Hamdullah tomorrow (Ghani's point person on this) to double check we could do a VTC with Ghani and this group ahead of the trip, I'm pretty sure it should be fine.

Do feel free to use this as a base as you see fit.

I look forward to catching up soon: Andrew suggested I should come along on Wednesday at 3.30 to discuss the visit questions.

It would be good to continue the discussion more broadly on the visit and various plans - the Afghan delegation will be here soon and perhaps we can all get together to discuss.

Sorry to send you so many unsolicited emails this weekend.

Wanted to follow-up on one of the Majority's emerging themes that I flagged coming out of Huma's interview -- the notion that HRC relied on Sid's advice and counsel on Libya to the exclusion of everyone else at the Department.

In case you missed it, Rep. Mike Pompeo was on Meet the Press this morning. Andrea Mitchell pressed him on the scope of the Committee's work and the witnesses they've chosen to call. Mitchell asked him, why "did you call Sid Blumenthal and Huma Abedin and all of these other personal aides and non-aides" to Hillary Clinton?

Pompeo's response didn't address Huma. But he did focus on Sid. In relevant part he said:

POMPEO: Well, we have focused on the central failure. We have focused on the security issues, and we'll continue, you'll see lots of questions about that on Thursday. Let me speak to Mr. Blumenthal. It goes directly to the security issue. We see now the former secretary relied on Mr. Blumenthal for most of her intelligence.

Mitchell summarily dismissed that as nonsense. Their subsequent exchange:

MITCHELL: That is factually not correct.

POMPEO: It absolutely factually correct.

MITCHELL: Relied on Mr. Blumenthal for most of her intelligence?

POMPEO: Ms. Mitchell, take a look at the e-mails trails and you'll see--

MITCHELL: I cover the State Department. That is just factually not correct and I've been as tough on this issue as anyone.

Hi John:

Wholly apart from our conversation about Climate, I wanted to let you know that I've thought hard about the Center for Equitable Growth, and would like to invite it to submit a proposal for a grant to Hewlett. I was thinking of something like $3M over three years (that is, $1M per year) in general operating support.

We need to work out the details, and we'd be doing this with an eye to our November board meeting. That may seem far away, but it's closer than you'd think in foundation time. I have copied Kelly Born, who is the Special Projects Program Officer. She'll work with Heather (also copied) to get the proposal into shape. Given that it's GOS, this shouldn't be very onerous.

We look forward to working with you on this as well.

Best,

Larry

Agree the foundation story not particularly damaging. Strikes me a lot of the stuff was accurate, a lot wrong, but doesn't seem to have any legs. Good to get it out now, so the standard response going forward can be if you want to match politico, go for it.

Email stuff may have more legs. Not clear to me that any laws were broken, but a good amount of effort was devoted to going after Rove for the same thing. So my guess is the other side may get traction.

On the record, I'd like to repeat what we said last week:

"Hillary Clinton supports marriage equality and hopes the Supreme Court will come down on the side of same-sex couples being guaranteed that constitutional right."

On background - I'd propose to give him what we've given to others:

Dylan - here's the full context of how we view this. While she has acknowledged that her own positions have evolved over time, she is and has been a supporter of marriage equality as a matter of policy and a matter of law, as she said in 2013. Hillary is glad that 37 states now have marriage equality, largely as a result of federal judges finding that a constitutional right, and she hopes the Supreme Court will take the opportunity to make marriage equality the law of the land.

In 2013 she joined the effort in support of marriage equality with a video for HRC: <http://www.cbsnews.com/news/hillary-clinton-announces-support-for-same-sex-marriage>
In that video she said she supports marriage equality as a matter of policy and law. : "That's why I support marriage for lesbian and gay couples. I support it personally and as a matter of policy and law."

Last week the specific question asked was whether or not she believed marriage equality is a constitutional right, one of our spokespeople gave the following quote: "Hillary Clinton supports marriage equality and hopes the Supreme Court will come down on the side of same-sex couples being guaranteed that constitutional right." Supporting it as a constitutional right is a matter of law.

During the 2014 interview with NPR, she was talking about the impact of activism in the states, and her support for that activism moving the issue forward at the state level "I fully endorse the efforts by activists who work state by state and in fact that is what is working." And again, she'd already made it clear in 2013 that she personally supports marriage equality as a matter of policy and law. In other words she supported the idea that it might take time for each state to come around. But that eventually we would need a federal constitutional ruling -- she always believed that was the appropriate outcome.

She also noted that once she was no longer Secretary of State and able to comment on domestic political issues she announced her full support for marriage equality.

A few days after the NPR interview she re-iterated her support during a CNN town hall: "I made a very clear statement when I got out of the State Department. I was free to comment on domestic political issues that I fully support marriage equality."

I'd also note that the Obama administration itself never announced its support for a constitutional right to marry on equal protection grounds until a month ago when it filed the brief in the SCOTUS case that HRC was asked about it. Prior to that, DOJ had only argued that bans on same-sex marriage should be subject to heightened scrutiny. Yet no one says DOJ flip-flopped when it endorsed an even stronger position last month - it was viewed as a natural extension of its previous positions in support of same-sex marriage.

I am breaking my strong presumption against reply all to double down on Mitt's note. As many of you know, I have banned laptops for over a decade, and I have found it improves classroom discussion and engenders very little complaint from the students. But my principal concern was the interference/distraction factor of the internet (this article says studies find students have something other than course-related material up on their screen about 40 percent of the time).

But this report shows that even without any internet distractions, people learn concepts much less effectively when taking notes by laptop than when taking notes by hand. They mindlessly record, practically verbatim, rather than doing the work of identifying the important concepts that hand-writing requires (unless you have been to stenography school, of course).

So well worth reading, and worth distributing to the students -- OFF LINE!!

Thanks, David

The Iowa Steak Fry spent more than $50,000 flying Bill and Hillary Clinton to the Democratic event outside Des Moines in September honoring retiring Sen. Tom Harkin.

New financial disclosure forms to the Federal Election Commission shows the committee that organized the event made a $50,099 payment for “travel expenses” to Executive Fliteways Inc, a Long Island, NY based charter jet company. According to Bloomberg News, the payment was for the former first couple.

It was the second largest single expense for the Steak Fry, after food.

Executive Fliteways offers a range of private planes, from a smaller Learjet 35, which goes for $2350 an hour, to a Gulfstream G-V, which rents for $7,500 per hour. A contract obtained this summer by the Las Vegas Review Journal for an unrelated speech shows that Clinton’s team requests “a Gulfstream 450 or larger jet.”

Clinton’s previous campaigns have come under fire – including from donors – for lavish spending. Her 2006 Senate re-election campaign, which faced only moderate Republican opposition, spent $160,000 on private jet travel, along with three-quarters of a million dollars on catering and entertaining, $13,000 on flowers, and $27,000 on valet parking.

The year-end finance report from Clinton’s 2008 presidential campaign shows a payment of almost $110,000 to Executive Fliteways. The campaign, like all other major presidential efforts, also had larger chartered plane for the candidate, staffers, and reporters.

Clinton’s defenders said the investment was well worth it. “The Harkin Streak Fry reportedly netted $100,000 and was enormously successful, largely due to the Clintons’ attendance. This right-wing attack is ironic coming from the Party where one potential presidential candidate used a state police helicopter to get to his son’s baseball game while another double-billed taxpayers and the state party for multiple plane tickets,” said Correct the Record’s Adrienne Elrod, referring to New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Florida Sen. Marco Rubio.

A new poll released on Wednesday shows that while Clinton’s foreign policy record, a major issue in 2008, is unlikely to turn off Iowa Democratic caucus-goers if she runs again in 2016, her ties to Wall Street could be a problem. The first state in the presidential nominating process went for Obama in 2008, fatally wounding Clinton’s presidential ambitions that year.

The former secretary of state is openly considering a second presidential run, and has said she will announce her plans sometime early next year.

Hillary Clinton is expected to be in Louisville tonight.

She's here to campaign for U.S. Senate candidate Alison Lundergan Grimes.

Clinton will be speaking at the Convention Center at 7 p.m. Tickets are free, but must be picked up at any Democratic Party headquarters across Kentucky.

Grimes is running against incumbent Mitch McConnell.

A big blow for Grimes came Tuesday when the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee pulled its television ads for Grimes. The committee will instead focus its funds on competitive races in Arkansas, Colorado and Georgia.

Most of the latest polls show Senator McConnell ahead.

The Hill opinion: Brent Budowsky: "Grimes, a true Clinton Dem"

By Brent Budowsky

October 14, 2014, 5:33 p.m. EDT

Kentucky Secretary of State Alison Lundergan Grimes first met Bill and Hillary Clinton decades ago, through the close friendship between their families. Young Alison heard stories about politics from both Clintons, and as the girl became a young woman — and now a candidate for the Senate — the Clintons became an inspiration for her political style and career.

The hotly contested Kentucky Senate battle pits Grimes against Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R). The race has more subplots than a Shakespearean drama, including control of the Senate, the unsavory negativity of political campaigns, attacks by Republicans that blame President Obama for every ill in the world, attempts by the GOP to tarnish every Democrat with guilt by association with the president, the valiant and somewhat successful efforts by red-state Democrats to distinguish themselves from Obama, and questions about the appropriate role of the press in fairly reporting the campaigns.

One recent poll found McConnell leading Grimes by 4 percentage points. Another found Grimes leading by 2 points. As of noon Tuesday, the summary of polling by RealClearPolitics finds McConnell ahead by 3 points, within the margin of error, in a race either candidate could win.

Last week during an editorial board interview, Grimes described herself as a Clinton Democrat and noted that she was a Hillary Clinton delegate in 2008. She also declined to say whether she voted for Obama.

Almost immediately, Chuck Todd, the moderator of "Meet the Press," said on "Morning Joe," an MSNBC show that offers daily derision of President Obama and leading Democrats, that Grimes should be "disqualified" from the race. The derision of Grimes was repeated by MSNBC host Chris Matthews, who also falsely described Obama as "intellectually lazy." It was repeated again in the New Republic, which called Grimes the worst candidate in 2014, a ludicrous insult of a strong candidate running a virtually even race against the Republican leader in the Senate.

I have great respect for Todd, who could someday be the heir to the late David Broder of The Washington Post, who was called the dean of political reporters. I will cut Todd a little slack. Even Derek Jeter occasionally struck out. But his cheap shot against Grimes was more appropriate for a GOP attack dog than a respected journalist analyzing the news. Predictably, McConnell made Todd the star of a negative ad attacking Grimes.

When Grimes says she is a Clinton Democrat, she is telling the truth, and when McConnell labels Grimes an Obama Democrat rather than a Clinton Democrat, he is bearing false witness. Shouldn't allegedly liberal-friendly media outlets such as MSNBC and the New Republic report this? Shouldn't all media report it? Isn't this why cable news ratings are dropping like a rock, and why Gallup finds that public confidence in television news has fallen to historic lows?

When Grimes charges McConnell with fomenting gridlock in Washington, objective reporters should report that McConnell indeed held meetings to undermine the Obama presidency even before his first inaugural; publicly stated his first priority was not creating jobs for Kentucky but destroying the Obama presidency; and pioneered the ultimate gridlock tactic of threatening to filibuster virtually all legislation, a GOP obstruction unprecedented in Senate history.

The Kentucky scenario is playing out in races across the nation. In the only narrative Republicans offer, voters should be frightened by Ebola and terrorism and angered by Washington, and it is all Obama's fault! And all Democrats are like Obama! The media should challenge the dishonesty of this narrative in every race and ask why Republicans offer no better plans to destroy the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria, combat Ebola, increase wages or improve healthcare.

Voters get it even if the media don't. Southern and red-state Democrats remain standing in tight races even after rightist billionaires and GOP partisans spend millions of dollars promoting dishonest attacks.

Alison Lundergan Grimes is the true, ultimate Clinton Democrat who believes in governing across the aisles. This is why the Clintons champion her so passionately. This is what Hillary Clinton will repeat with force in Kentucky Wednesday night. This is a big truth. Any statement to the contrary is a big lie. It is high time the media report it.

A federal judge in Las Vegas has dismissed a misdemeanor violence charge against a Phoenix woman who pleaded guilty to trespassing after a shoe was thrown at former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal reported (<http://bit.ly/1nclNMd>) Tuesday that U.S. District Magistrate Judge George Foley Jr. accepted a prosecution request to dismiss the violence charge against 36-year-old Alison Michelle Ernst and scheduled a Thursday hearing on her release from custody.

Foley says he wants the defendant to be freed pending sentencing on the misdemeanor trespassing count.

Ernst could face up to six months in prison but has already been in custody since shortly after the April 10 incident in which a soccer shoe missed Clinton on stage at the Mandalay Bay resort.

By Peter Hamby

10/18/2016

October 15, 2014, 10:00 a.m. EDT

Night after night, Republicans are going back to school in an effort to build a new army of communications operatives for the Twitter age.

The courses at "Comms College" — the GOP's secret training ground for social media-savvy communications staffers — are taught in a sterile conference room on Capitol Hill. Students are instructed that the modern news cycle, fueled by the disruptive power of the web and constantly-filing reporters, has no patience for old political playbooks.

That's an especially important lesson for Republicans heading into the next presidential election. President Barack Obama's press operation, digitally-fluent and nimble, handily outpaced their GOPopponents in 2008 and 2012. Republicans — well aware of Hillary Clinton's ability to spark an Internet sensation with a single tweet — are determined to mount a modern media strategy to battle back in 2016.

"If you are stubborn and fail to adapt to the environment and think that the strategy from 20 years ago is the way it is today, you are going to lose, it's that simple," said Rob Lockwood, the 27-year-old leader of the GOP boot camp, which is housed at the Republican National Committee in Washington. "This is about understanding the modern reality of the media."

On a recent evening, two dozen operatives — most of them in their 20s and some in need of a shave — filed into the RNC conference room. Lockwood opened the lesson with a slideshow. It included a picture of boxer Mike Tyson in the ring, accompanied by his famous maxim: "Everybody has a plan until they get punched in the mouth."

The message to students: It's critical for campaigns to be adaptive and resourceful in making their case to the media, and responding to a constant barrage of press inquiries and negative headlines.

Since the beginning of 2014, the RNC says it has graduated over 200 operatives and placed many of them as communications directors and press secretaries in Capitol Hill offices and federal campaigns nationwide, from Alaska to Arizona to New York and North Carolina. Lockwood has also conducted media training boot camps with nearly 1,000 candidates, staff and local political figures in a dozen states.

There's a session on opposition research and tracking, Facebook algorithms and Google metrics. There are also tips on dressing for television (no pocket squares, seersucker or dangly jewelry), and lessons on social media and partisan news sites that give campaigns the power to peddle their messages without the filter of "mainstream" reporters. Lockwood even has reading recommendations, including "Collision 2012," "The Victory Lab" and "Double Down."

Above all else, Lockwood preaches how mobile devices and the social web, in just a matter of years, have dramatically altered media behavior. For click-hungry reporters in the digital ecosystem, their motives, competitiveness and editorial standards have all mutated — presenting all manner of opportunities and dangers.

"Doing a press conference just to do a press conference doesn't work anymore," Lockwood tells students. "It's an antiquated way of thinking. If you don't know what you want your headline to be, and think you can go out there and say what you want in five points, and answer none of the questions, that the news reports are going to be about your five points. Nope. The reports will probably be about the five things you didn't answer."

The RNC runs other "colleges" for young operatives or staff veterans looking to brush up on their skills, including a campaign management college run by Ohio GOP operative Jonathan Gornley, and a campaign finance school for Republican attorneys.

But as Republicans surveyed their losses after the 2012 presidential campaign and looked at their roster of communications operatives, they realized they weren't able to field their best talent to compete with Obama's brigade of Chicago-based digital natives — in part because the GOP equivalent didn't exist.

"During the last campaign, we would sit around with the Romney campaign trying to identify potential press folks, either for Victory positions here at the RNC, or staff positions with the campaign, and we realized that that bench was not deep with people who had been trained or had significant campaign experience," says Sean Spicer, the RNC's communications director. "We would struggle to fill those positions with qualified people."

Spicer and Reince Priebus, the RNC chairman, embarked on an overhaul of the organization's media operations, hiring web-fluent staffers, streamlining their surrogate database and stepping up their media-training operations to instill discipline over candidates. The latter move, Priebus said, became essential after witnessing Republican candidates up and down the ballot in 2012 ruin news cycles with offensive or tone-deaf comments on issues like abortion or rape.

"I'd rather have candidates being careful to a fault than, you know, having a fountain of blabber coming out of their mouth that's not disciplined," Priebus says. "We are training candidates, training state parties, training operatives to appreciate that communicating isn't just a free-for-all, natural-born type of activity. People need to be trained and disciplined."

Reeling from their demographic drubbing among Hispanics, African-Americans and women in 2012, they understood the need to present a fresher face to the American public, an ongoing process. Spicer said he recently met with the executive producer of a network Sunday show who begged him for "new hip conservatives" to feature on the show's roundtable.

Spicer said the committee is obliging, not just to aid the media, but to help campaigns tap into a database of Republican surrogates with ease. "It used to be, like, people would call the RNC and say, 'How do I get in touch with Rudy Giuliani?' And we'd be like, 'Google!'"

"Now all of those things are catalogued," Spicer says. "Someone will call and say, 'We are doing a health care push next week, how many doctors or primary care physicians do you have? How many Asians do you have? How many Jews? You wanna do a Rosh Hashanah thing or something on Israel?' You name it."

Ben LaBolt, who served as Obama's national press secretary during the 2012 campaign, says it's shrewd for Republicans to update their media strategy, even if they're starting from behind.

"Communications tools and methods change each election cycle, sometimes rapidly," LaBolt says. "While they were once siloed, by President Obama's re-election campaign, we had learned to fully integrate media relations with digital communications in order to reach all prospective supporters where there were. It might be catch-up, but the Republicans are smart to play it."

The RNC's post-election "Growth and Opportunity Project" — unofficially known as the party's "autopsy" report — recommended much more than just cosmetic fixes. It called for overhauling the professional culture of the party and fixing rusted-over campaign mechanics so that Republicans could better compete with Democrats in the tactical realm. The Republican coalition has since worked to improve their data, digital and information-sharing programs.

Still, the results are mixed.

With free-spending outside groups taking on a greater role in campaigns and siphoning resources away from the RNC, Priebus figured staff training was something the committee could own.

"Training has to be a cornerstone of what we do today and in the future," Priebus says.

Lockwood, a veteran of the North Carolina Republican Party and the College Republican National Committee, was recruited in late 2013 to cultivate future communicators for the party.

A brawny, 6'4" Massachusetts native who rarely lets his iPhone out his clutches, Lockwood came of age in the digital era and knew instinctively that a single link circulated on Twitter could have more power in shaping a narrative than any newspaper front page or morning TV show. "Rob was the ideal choice for this," Spicer says. "We call him the dean."

The "college," a series of eight night classes, focuses on tactics, not policy. The presentations are heavy with do's and don't's for Republicans who work with the press.

His opening statement sets the tone. "Understanding that the press is attracted to conflict is paramount to understanding the modern media," Lockwood says.

Then, on his laptop, he ticks through his slideshow: "Don't use jokes that you've never told before ... Jay Carney showed everyday that it's better to be dull than offensive," referring to the former White House press secretary who is now a CNN political commentator. "Don't introduce new phrases, like Etch-a-sketch."

Lockwood says the boot camp isn't just for up-and-comers. Comparing it to spring training, he says veteran GOP operatives are encouraged to take the course, too.

"There are a lot of people who are not of this generation but are subject to the rules of it," he says. "That's why we want everybody to get up to speed."

As much as the classes focus on the capacity of the web to drive a message, students are urged not to chase every shiny object or micro-story that pops on Twitter.

The seminars put an emphasis on breaking down the traditional barriers that exist between different segments of a campaign. Press staffers are given crash courses in polling and media-buying, for instance, so they can be conversant on those topics when a reporter calls.

"I really had very little exposure to polling or digital until then," says Charlotte Guyett, a former RNC intern who worked at a GOP consulting firm before enrolling in "Comms College." Guyett is now the press secretary for Elise Stefanik's House campaign in New York's 21st Congressional District.

Guest speakers with recent, real world campaign experience, young and old, parade through and field questions. In one September session, Tim Miller, the executive director of America Rising, a GOP research firm, encouraged the students to engage with the media proactively instead of keeping them at arm's length.

"If you treat reporters with hostility," Miller said, "there will be blood."

Miller, himself a former RNC staffer, praised the committee for changing its way of thinking.

"As recently as 2008 and 2010, you would sit in these rooms and it would be somebody from the Lee Atwater era, talking about how the media is your enemy," he says. "My talk was about talking the ways to use the 24/7 news cycle and Twitter and social media to your advantage, as well as recognizing the pitfalls."

The Detroit News: "Obama, Bill Clinton to campaign for Michigan Dems"

By David Shepardson

October 15, 2014, 12:34 p.m. EDT

President Barack Obama will make a campaign stop in the Detroit area in the final week of the midterm campaign, while former President Bill Clinton will stump in Flint next week.

The White House confirmed Wednesday that the president will make the Metro Detroit visit as part of a series of events in at least four states. The former president's visit was confirmed by a high-ranking Democratic source.

Obama will campaign for Democrats Mark Schauer, who is running for governor against first-term Gov. Rick Snyder, and Rep. Gary Peters, the Bloomfield Township Democrat who is challenging former Michigan Secretary of State Terri Lynn Land to replace the retiring Sen. Carl Levin, D-Detroit.

The White House confirmed the visit Wednesday and said further details of the president's trip will be announced in the coming days. There were no other details about Bill Clinton's visit, which is scheduled to follow wife Hillary Rodham Clinton's campaign trip Thursday to Oakland University.

Michigan's election has drawn many high-profile politicians including Vice President Joe Biden, first lady Michelle Obama, 2012 GOP presidential candidate Mitt Romney, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, as well as former Florida Gov. and 2016 presidential prospect Jeb Bush.

Obama will be in Bridgeport, Conn., Wednesday, followed by a rally in Maryland for gubernatorial hopeful Anthony Brown and Gov. Pat Quinn in Illinois on Sunday.

He will also attend rallies for gubernatorial candidates Mary Burke in Milwaukee, Tom Wolf in Philadelphia and Mike Michaud in Portland, Me.

Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Maine are states that Obama carried twice. Obama won Michigan by 9.5 percentage points in 2012 over Detroit native Romney. He had such a strong lead in Michigan that he didn't visit the state in the six months before the election.

The first lady campaigned in Detroit Friday for Peters and Schauer, while U.S. Sen. Rand Paul, R-Ky., is scheduled to campaign in Michigan later this month.

Obama appeared in Ann Arbor with Peters in April, but hasn't campaigned with Schauer. He hasn't campaigned in Michigan for more than six months.

"Democrat candidates for governor have spent this election cycle running away from President Obama's record low approval ratings and failed policies, but make no mistake, they own them now," said Republicans Governors Association spokesman Jon Thompson.

With Democrats facing increasingly long odds of holding the Senate, Obama is shifting his focus to the governors' races in closely fought states. Peters — who holds a lead of close to 10 percentage points in most polls — is the only Senate candidate for whom Obama has announced plans to campaign.

Republicans need to pick up six states to win control, but have shifted focus away from Michigan. The National Republican Senatorial Campaign committee earlier this month canceled $850,000 in planned advertising on behalf of Land.

Sen. Kelly Ayotte, R-N.H., will campaign Wednesday for Land in Utica.

Schauer trails Snyder in most polls.

Obama is certain to highlight the auto bailout and the successful turnaround of the U.S. auto industry in his Michigan trip — a staple of almost all speeches the president makes. Democrats in Michigan have made Land's initial opposition to the auto bailout and support for Romney's position — that automakers had to first file for bankruptcy before getting government loans — a big part of the campaign.

The Hill blog: Floor Action: "Bachmann: 'No plan to run for president'"

By Cristina Marcos

October 15, 2014, 1:06 p.m. EDT

Conservative firebrand Rep. Michele Bachmann (R-Minn.) said Wednesday that she has "no plan" to launch another presidential campaign in 2016.

Bachmann, who is retiring from Congress at the end of this year, told The Hill in an interview that running for president in 2012 was enough.

"I have no plan to run for president in 2016," Bachmann said.

"I was so honored to be able to do it in 2012. It was really one of the greatest experiences in my life. But I think the men who run will tell you too, it's one of the most difficult things you ever embrace upon," Bachmann added.

Earlier this year, Bachmann hinted that she might run for president again even though she's not frequently mentioned as a candidate.

"The only thing that the media has speculated on is that it's going to be various men that are running," Bachmann told RealClearPolitics in July. "They haven't speculated, for instance, that I'm going to run. What if I decide to run? And there's a chance I could run."

Asked if she had changed her mind since then, Bachmann insisted that she had merely made a "rhetorical comment" when asked about the lack of potential female Republican presidential candidates in 2016.

"Oh, no, no, no. Not at all. No. The context of my remarks were that they were suggesting that no woman would be running for president on the Republican side and I said, 'Well, I'm an obvious choice,'" Bachmann said. "So that was the nexus of my remarks: Who knows, maybe I'll run. It wasn't that I was going to. It was just a rhetorical comment."

Bachmann briefly surged in the polls in 2011 and won the Iowa Straw Poll. But her campaign fizzled afterward and she came in a disappointing sixth place in the Iowa caucuses.

The Minnesota Republican said that having a woman on either presidential ticket shouldn't be prioritized over a compelling policy alternative.

"I think the issue isn't gender so much as it is ideas. That's what people are looking for," Bachmann said.

Bachmann also denied that the Republican presidential field lacked diversity, noting that she was part of a 2012 GOP presidential field that also included Herman Cain, an African-American.

"We had people on the stage that demonstrated diversity," Bachmann said.

She argued that former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton would be viewed as an extension of President Obama's administration.

"If Mrs. Clinton is running in 2016, she will effectively be the ideas that would be Barack Obama's third and fourth term for president," Bachmann said.

During a farewell speech at the Heritage Foundation on Wednesday, Bachmann indicated that she won't be leaving the political scene despite her departure from Capitol Hill. She urged Republicans to "go bold" if they win both chambers of Congress in this year's elections and consider proposals like reforming the tax code and allowing the Export-Import Bank to expire.

"You either go bold or you don't go at all," Bachmann said. "If you want somebody to lead the debate, I'll lead the debate."

The most up-to-date resource available on technology transfer law

The Technology Transfer Law Handbook

There have been an overwhelming number of changes that directly impact technology transfer activities at universities and medical schools, including enactment of the America Invents Act of 2011, recent court decisions such as Prometheus Laboratories, Inc. v. Mayo Collaborative Services and Association for Molecular Pathology v. Myriad Genetics, Inc., and modifications in regulations in the past two or three years.

The Technology Transfer Law Handbook is an invaluable resource for practitioners serving the technology transfer community, delineating the full scope of recent developments and how they affect technology transfer operations in unique and unexpected ways, as well as presenting new challenges and opportunities.

The handbook covers a broad range of essential topics, including the following:

- Post-grant proceedings under AIA;
- Managing patent prosecution;
- Patenting diagnostic tests;
- University patent enforcement;
- Licensing of federally supported subject inventions;
- Approaches to managing patent filing costs;
- Biotech licensing; and
- The university as a venture investor.

Subject: Why GOP Debate Was a Bad Sign for Big Banks | American Banker

Lovely illustration of the abysmal ignorance about the people who have the gall to run for president. Obviously, part is politics, but much is sheer ignorance. How pathetic. And, of course, it's likely this ignorance extends to many critical issues, other than banking. It's government by ignorance and superstition. HELP!!!

Mr. President,

According to recent News the US is being intimidated by Terror Organizations taking precautionary defensive steps closing down Embassies and Consulates. Such a situation would not have occurred if the Narcotic Vegetation in South Eastern Asia

Has ceased to threaten Mankind previously as well as I understand Conclusions are for the Administration to be extracted most urgently under current circumstances

Recent Unmanned Aircraft and other Aerial Variants development might have removed the current Menace hovering on Mankind that gets been doubling stricken by, Drugs and Terror combination simultaneously.

Several hundreds of those Aircraft might have wiped out the Immense Afghan Narcotic (Poppy-Opium and Cocaine) Vegetation utilizing small explosive containers filled with defoliant liquid.

When blasted, the liquid is being splashed on the Narcotic bushes causing them to dry up within several days severing thus Terror Organizations' Financial source and bringing Salvation to millions of Potential Drug Addicts.

Such an Operation carried out on large scale, might have paralyzed Terror averting its current intimidation of Mankind to its present raging extent I suggest contacting me for technical details delivery required for rendering Afghan Imminent Ignominious Afghan Defeat to Honorary Surprising Victorious Aftermath. US Troops are stuck for 12 years inauspiciously in Afghan Marsh without any conspicuous achievement .In addition to the feasibility of getting extricated from the entrapment averting imminent ignominious inevitable defeat in the Campaign there would achieve a surprising Victorious aftermath as a result of Afghan Narcotic Vegetation desertification Souvenir from pulling out NATO Troops resuming as well that way US Deterrence that has eroded from Nine Eleven Horrendousness. Utilization of US New Aerial Bases in Niger seems currently an augmentation of prospects of annihilating Terror Organizations to much a greater extent than previously. There is no doubt about the importance of Internal Affairs likewise Obamacare program but those should not have been instead of Defense necessities I am very delighted to be informed about construction of US Aerial Base in the African State of Niger designed for Unmanned Aircraft that might have transmuted Afghan Immense Narcotic Vegetation to Straw Innocuous Fields to Mankind Entire Affluence in Alfred Nobel Spirit Inspiration.

Would you believe that my Innovative Inventive Suggestion is Capable of Salvation Human Mankind of the Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror Simultaneously? Contact me for specifications! Several companies in the US produce UAV capable of Eradicating the Narcotic Vegetation everywhere transmuting it to giant straw deserts removing the hovering jeopardy of Drugs and Terror above Mankind Three outcomes might have emerged: 1) severing of Terror organizations from their Financial Source.

2) Salvation of millions of potential addicts from awful agony and death 3) Restoration of US deterrence that has eroded to a great extent after Nine Eleven Horrendousness. Please contact me for relevant specifications .It turned out watching TV Program dedicated to US Arsenal that as many as 7000 UAV are being stored unused in Magazines instead of attacking Narcotic Vegetation everywhere transmuting it to Arid Desert severing that way Terror Organizations Financial Conduit and accelerating US Troops pulling out from Afghanistan. Here's a brief outline of some reactions. We're happy to engage directly with Heather, but wanted to talk with you first.

1. Need to develop/refresh a short-term business plan -- what are our strategies, priorities, goals for next 12-18 months? Without that clarity and focus, we run the risk of reacting to wish lists of academic economists, who are not the best arbiters of how to get things done.
2. Overarching questions about Heather's ability to envision, and lead, a bigger initiative that includes many elements outside of her comfort zone.
3. Need for Neera's approval of staff hires.
4. Steering committee composition.

Hello Herb, Susan, and Steve,

Happy New Year! I hope you're all well.

I wanted to give you a brief 2014 update from really rainy Washington. It would be helpful to set up a call soon as well as I have some questions interspersed below. I'll note that John's been gone a week, but he's already called to give me ideas, which was great. He sounds happy and I got to discuss much of this list with him as well.

Academic engagement

Three staff and I spent last weekend at the ASSA meetings in Philadelphia networking and drumming up interest. A few ASSA take-aways are:

- There is a real appetite for visiting scholar program. This was also underscored by Larry Katz/David Autor/Claudia Goldin. A key question here will be space.
- We definitely need in-house economists to network/identify the right people. The conference underscored my thinking that younger scholars are the way to go, but to hire one other senior person who can help me with the team.
- We want to make a splash at the ASSA next year — I think we should host a reception in a room close to either Berkeley or Harvard for our Research Advisory Board and grantees, to drum up excitement.
- Finally, I had a really good chat with Jim Poterba, who runs the NBER. He started off the conversation with his fears about us not paying overhead. I hear you on this, but it now feels like it means setting aside MIT/NBER as places to fund. On the grant-making, the LOIs are coming in slowly and we sent out another reminder today to a large list. We have some good proposals already, but only a few so far. On the issue of a grant to Harvard/MIT, I had a nice chat with Autor/Goldin/Katz, but they are not biting. David said they were "fully funded," but they perked up at the idea of visiting fellows for their students/recent graduates. For me, it felt like a reversal from our November conversation. I'd like to discuss this with you.

Internal Research/product queue

We are finally settling into sorting out our product queue. I'll have more details on this in the next update, but one thing I know is that we are planning to do an event for Thomas Piketty around his new (big, important) book coming out in March. The event will be April 15, which isn't the best, but it's what he can do. I'm writing reviews for a couple of places and want to make sure that we pull out all the stops to make sure we connect Emmanuel's co-author with DC.

Hiring/staffing:

Economists:

- We interviewed about 14 PhD candidates at ASSA, including Saez and Chetty students. One clear take-away is that our idea is attracting very high quality candidates. None of the candidates knew who was on our board, but they seemed excited by the job ad describing our mission. That felt like a good sign. I am playing with offering a title like "Fellow" or "Post-doctoral Fellow" for those who may want to consider going back to academia. This may be good for us/good for them.
- I also heard more confirmation that the young economist we've offered a job to (he hasn't accepted yet as he is waiting on his partner's job offers) is an excellent choice, so that felt good.
- I have a senior person ready to start as a visiting scholar from June 2014 through the academic year. Robert Lynch focuses on early childhood and immigration and has some nice model lying on how inequality in education affects growth. The topics will be both academically and politically relevant, they may help us connect more with the Russell Sage Foundation (Robert could manage a special issue of their new journal, tapping into our growing network), and he's a good manager and mentor and can help me guide a young team. Further, going this route means that I get some that I know is good and up to the job, without having to make a permanent commitment yet. With so much hiring, that's a bit of a relief since this will be a key position.

Communications/Publications:

- I have an excellent candidate for Senior Communications Director, Ed Paisley (and John agrees). Ed founded CAP's Editorial Team and spent a couple of decades as a financial journalist. He knows media, he's an excellent editor who knows how to work with academics, and he's a proven excellent manager. The offer is on Neera's desk and if she says yes, then we'll be able to offer him the position.

Fundraising. Before John went to the WH, he gave me some people to meet — David Beier, Phil Murphy, and Ira Fishman — and I've had time to talk to two so far:

- David, who has extensive political and business networks, works a couple blocks from your office and was eager to help. He sent us a check for around $2k, so we now have two funders! He suggested he could perhaps pull together a San Francisco meeting of business leaders. He also said that, at John's urging, he'd like to join the Steering Committee. I'd like to talk this over with you. He says you have met, but I will send over a bio and hopefully we can set up a time to discuss this.
- Phil was most recently the Ambassador to Germany and an old friend of John's. He offered to put together a meeting of smart business leaders in NYC and to serve as an informal advisor (he may take a position where he could not sit on any boards). John recommended he play a chair role in his absence and we'll see whether he can actually do that.

On my to do list is to follow up on all the foundation recommendations you sent and I will likely have questions, so let's add that to our call agenda, too. My deadline for that is that I will be in NYC in mid-February and I'll need to start scheduling the round of meetings.

I hope we talk soon and please let me know if you have any comments/concerns/questions.

Best,
Heather

Halifax International Security Forum Releases Agenda

Annual Global Meeting Will Take Terrorist Threat Head-On

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

18 November 2014

HALIFAX, NS—The Halifax International Security Forum released the agenda today for this year's Forum to be held November 20-22 in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The mix of on-the-record plenary sessions and smaller, off-the-record discussions address the consequence and implications of the terror attacks in Paris and cover a wide range of security and defense issues.

"With Paris top of mind for security officials and citizens around the world, the ideas generated at Halifax International Security Forum this weekend will be more important than ever," said Peter Van Praagh, President of Halifax International Security Forum. "The agenda ensures that every angle of the common threats that democracies face are addressed head-on."

The Halifax International Security Forum's annual agenda has earned a global reputation for identifying the issues that security officials must confront today and into the future. In 2013, the plenary "Free Radicals With Return Tickets" addressed the urgent issue of Western youth joining radical terrorist organizations in increasing numbers and the potential for attacks in our own cities. This year's agenda will be no different.

Halifax brings together individuals who are on the ground facing consequential local threats, writers who challenge and influence the world's thinking on security, and decision-makers who make the tough choices.

The agenda for the 2015 Halifax International Security Forum is available here .

The Halifax International Security Forum is an independent, non-profit, non-partisan organization based in Washington, DC. The Forum is made possible by the generous support from its partners, including the Government of Canada, and the Halifax Canada Club.

Here's my proposal for Local 1199, please let me know what you think. George Gresham is going to be in LA on Thursday and I am sure will bring up his Executive Board request with the Secretary. I'd like to head that off with a plan. Although we have hit all of the marks with SEIU Intl, Local 1199 will be key to passing endorsement on the board.

Proposal:

Coordinate with Local 1199 on a date for George and some key board members to visit our HQ in Brooklyn. We coordinate that campaign stop by when the Secretary is in the HQ. If HRC could stop by for 10 minutes that should put Local 1199 issue to bed.

What do you all think of that? Its a sort of OTR approach and we're not officially meeting with the Executive Board but giving them some extra love.

Circling back on my response, I agree regarding the Intl. But 1199 is a issue to work out. We will likely need their votes on the board for endorsement. I don't think the Intl can help us with that either. I might need a OTR to get it done.

Subject: Re: DRAFT: TPP statement

Thanks to all for the feedback. This is indeed a hard balance to strike, since we don't want to invite mockery for being too enthusiastically opposed to a deal she once championed, or over-claiming how bad it is, since it's a very close call on the merits. Below and attached is a revised draft:

Statement on TPP

As Secretary of State, I called for a strong, fair, and balanced trans-Pacific trade agreement as part of a broader strategy to reassert American leadership in Asia and a robust economic agenda at home to strengthen our ability to compete successfully with anyone in the world. I salute President Obama and his team for working incredibly hard in pursuit of that kind of deal. Based on what I have seen so far, however, the final Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) does not do meet the high bar by which we should judge any new trade agreement – and I cannot support it.

As I have said many times, we need to be sure that any new trade agreement will create good American jobs, raise wages, and advance our national security. The goal is greater prosperity for American families, not trade for trade's sake. That is why, as a Senator, I voted against agreements – like the Central American Free Trade Agreement -- that I didn't think measured up.

The Obama administration deserves credit for securing improvements on a range of key issues in TPP, but there are significant flaws that remain unresolved and tip the balance against this agreement. I believe it will do more harm than good for hard-working American families whose paychecks have barely budged in years while corporate profits have reached near-record highs. It's a close call, but this is the wrong agreement at the wrong time.

We still need to do more to stop currency manipulation, which costs American jobs and puts our businesses at a disadvantage. We can't allow other countries to play by their own rules or exploit American consumers – something we've seen too often over the past 15 years. We also need to get tougher on unfair subsidies, loopholes, and other underhanded trading practices. Some progress has been made in this agreement to better protect workers and the environment, but we need to go further, especially when it comes to clear, enforceable assurances that countries will meet their labor obligations under this deal. And, as I wrote in my book Hard Choices, I remain deeply concerned about a process for settling trade disputes that, despite new improvements, still favors powerful corporations at the expense of everyone else.

As President, I will pursue a comprehensive approach to trade that addresses these challenges and prioritizes the needs of American workers and families.

First, I will fight to improve our country's economic competitiveness based on strong growth, fair growth, and long-term growth. That's how we'll make trade work more for us rather than against us. We need to close tax loopholes that reward corporations for shipping jobs overseas and instead create more good-paying jobs at home and invest in the sources of American strength, from infrastructure to innovation to clean energy. Most of all, we have to invest in our people, so every American can get the skills and training they need to compete in the global economy.

Second, I will strengthen enforcement of the trade agreements we already have and hold China and others accountable for their unfair trading practices.

Third, I still believe a strong and fair trans-Pacific trade agreement is both possible and necessary, so I will build on the Obama administration's valuable work and negotiate a deal that meets our tests and delivers for everyday Americans.

Fourth, I will bring more transparency and inclusiveness to trade negotiations, including making sure that workers, labor unions, NGOs, and small businesses are well-represented at every stage. Just as we demand more open and fair markets, we should also demand more open and fair negotiations.

I will also continue to reassert American leadership in Asia, where so much of the future of the 21st century will be written. Our strategic position in the region, the security of allies like Japan and South Korea, and our ability to push China to act responsibly all depend on a strong American leadership.

As President, I'll keep doing what I've always done – fighting for families, fighting for fairness, fighting for you.

NAME,

This week, Hillary took the boldest stance a presidential candidate has ever offered on immigration reform.

What was the Republicans response? A spokesperson for one Republican candidate for president called millions of people -- people who contribute to our economy and are Americans in everything but citizenship paperwork -- the equivalent of "domestic terrorists."

That's not contributing to the serious debate our country needs on the issue -- it's just name calling (and deeply offensive, to boot).

Our opponents aren't going to engage on the issues because they don't have real solutions. They're just going to talk.

We're going to act. Chip in $X or more right now to support this work:

Despite the attacks that Republicans have been throwing at her, Hillary has been steadily gaining favor over the last few months. That's good news, straight from the latest New York Times/CBS News poll.

Supporters like you made this happen by recognizing these attacks as baseless smears -- and fighting back with the truth in conversations online and around the dinner table.

There's a reason that the other side seems more focused on spreading rumors and lies about us than on making their own case to voters. This campaign is still early, but it's only getting stronger as more and more Americans join our team.

We need to make sure we have the resources to support that growth and to fight back against the other side's accusations. Can you donate $5 or more today?//Founding Donors like you have gotten us this far, and thank you for that -- now can you commit to making a monthly donation?

Hello Big Campaign,

We at Progressive Media USA would like to share our 'McCain Events Calendar' with you.

Every Monday, we'll post our 'McCain Events Calendar' to this list. The calendar will include information about McCain's schedule for the rest of the week. As the week progresses and McCain's schedule changes, we'll send an updated version of the calendar to the list.

Whenever possible, we'll include a description of the event and address and venue information. Further, we'll list the whereabouts of Cindy McCain and other important surrogates as the campaign develops. In addition, we'll do our best to include pre-announced television appearances.

Obviously, all of this scheduling information is flexible and can change at the last minute.

If at any time you have questions about the details enclosed in the calendar, please just ask.

Looking forward to keeping you informed,

Subject: Major victory for American taxpayers

Victory for Taxpayers on Coal

POGO has long been urging the Interior Department to update its outdated coal rules for mining on federal land. Today, the Department announced it would be halting coal leases while it undertakes an in-depth review of the federal coal program for the first time in 30 years.

"If the administration follows through with efforts to reform the outdated federal coal program to ensure transparency, it will be a win for American taxpayers," says POGO Executive Director Danielle Brian.

I like this a lot, and wouldn't change a thing. The noting of specific individuals, as well as groups, works perfectly in my view. And the 'how we do it' close is needed.

Subject: DRAFT: New riff for Iowa - Fighting for You

We've been discussing a new riff about how HRC is fighting for real change in the real lives of real people, something that helps her channel the passion we saw last night about Flint into our core economic concerns. What do people think of the below?

You know why I'm so determined? Because of you. Because of the people I've met all across Iowa and our country.

I'm fighting for the teachers who lost their jobs because Governor Branstad vetoed funding for schools. For the child care workers and home health aides I've met who work around the clock taking care of other people's families – they shouldn't need food stamps to take care of their own. For the children in Flint drinking poisoned water because their government doesn't think their lives matter.

I'm fighting for Larry, the worried husband I met in Waterloo last month. His wife Brenda spends hundreds of dollars each month on medicine for arthritis and osteoporosis. When they see hedge fund tycoons buying drug companies and raising prices by 4000 percent overnight, they just want to scream.

I'm fighting for Brandi, a young woman in Des Moines who was laid off six years ago in the middle of the recession. She went back to school, worked hard, got her degree. Now she's a supervisor in a restaurant, but still only makes $9.50 an hour. That's just not enough, not with kids in the house and bills to pay. She desperately needs a raise.

You shouldn't have to scream to be heard. You don't need more promises, you need more results. And we don't have time for ideas that sound good on paper but will never make a difference in your life. We need to roll up our sleeves and actually get Brandi that raise. Stand up to the drug companies so Larry and Brenda aren't all alone. Make the economy work for the struggling, the striving, and the successful.

Here's how we do it:

We need more fairness in this country, so all the wealth and opportunities don't just go to those at the top. But we can't stop there. We also need more growth in our economy, so you can find that new job, get that raise, start a small business – so you can get ahead and stay ahead. America grows when your paycheck grows. Not when multimillionaires get another tax cut.

I know what it takes to make real change in the real lives of real people -- because I've been doing it my whole life. And I'm just getting warmed up. Iowa, I'm listening you. I'm fighting for you. And I'm going to deliver.

Subject: Per your request
Dear John,

You asked that I prepare a series of items needed from the current administration immediately before and after November 4. The following outlines what we believe to be the most important needs.

Requests to be made as soon as possible:

- 1) Request the use of military aircraft to transport the President-elect during the entire time of the transition period on a non-reimbursable basis.
- 2) Request assistance with finding temporary SCIF in Chicago. GSA is having a hard time finding a temporary SCIF in Chicago because they can't say who it would be used by (having to fly under the radar in chi). We would like assistance in identifying a contact either with FBI or CIA in Chicago for GSA or us to talk about using a location on a temporary basis until our office is up and running.
- 3) Request WHCA support services be made available on an as needed basis immediately following election.

Requests for immediately after November 4:

- 1) Request (selective) use of White House Transportation Agency resources for the incoming Chief of Staff and National Security Advisor;
- 2) Photographic services from the White House Photo Office for purposes of an official photo of the President-elect and Vice President-elect;
- 3) Medical care and support for the President-elect and Vice President-elect from military personnel stationed at the White House medical unit (we believe this is already done, so just need confirmation);
- 4) Valet services for the President-elect from White House Mess personnel;
- 5) Request use of Blair House by the President-elect and members of his immediate family beginning January 2, 2009 through noon on Inauguration Day.
- 6) Request to have office space made available in EEOB for one Management/Ops head and 1-2 assistants to help ensure smooth process will be in place for January 20 intake of personnel.

John, by way of background, the then-incoming Bush Administration officially requested the use of military aircraft and use of Blair House starting January 5, 2001. Aircraft use was granted just before inauguration day, but I cannot find where we actually granted use of Blair at all. Blair House, if I remember correctly, is actually controlled by State and I think they had issue with providing it, but I may be wrong.

I added #6 because I was reminded that Bush Administration sought, and we provided, office space for Hector to use along with one-two assistants right after the New Year. They were the only people we allowed to have office space prior to noon on Jan. 20.

Let me know if you need anything else.
Brad

Subject: AmeriCorps 20th and WJC

Hi John,

I Hope the summer has meant some kick-back time for you and Mary. And wondering where in the world the summer has gone....

This quick note is to make sure you've heard about conversations underway on whether/how to honor President Clinton as we celebrate this 20th anniversary on September 12th. It is late in the game to focus on this, but I've talked with a few people about creating an annual WJC award for the best AmeriCorps Member of the Year. Nominations would come through state commissions (broad involvement) and criteria would emphasize getting things done.

It's a modest honor -- nothing as bold as naming the volunteer fund after President Bush. But it is something where nothing exists now. And if President Obama liked the idea, his announcing it would elevate its significance.

Do you think this is worth pursuing? If so, can you help?

Warm regards,
Phyllis

Subject: No Ceilings!

All,

I am thrilled to share with you, on this day after International Women's Day, three significant milestones from No Ceilings: The Full Participation Project that began yesterday and will continue through tomorrow. As you may know, Secretary Clinton and Chelsea launched No Ceilings in 2013 to measure the gains women and girls have made since the United Nations' Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing in 1995 and this week we are releasing the culmination of our data work in three exciting ways:

1. "Not There"

To raise awareness that we're not there yet when it comes to gender equality, with pro-bono support from the award-winning agency Droga5, we launched "Not There"—a brief awareness effort that literally removes women from the media and across sites in New York City. The effort is also gathering amazing attention on social media, with global icons, brands, and celebrities who partnered with us changing their profile pictures to a female silhouette and the URL for the website, Not-There.org.

We've received a lot of great coverage on this as well, including pieces from the New York Times, Vogue, AdAge, MTV News, Glamour, Refinery 29, and Buzzfeed.

2. The Full Participation Report

Over the last year, No Ceilings has worked alongside the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation to collect and analyze data from more than 190 countries, which has now been compiled into one comprehensive report. The report shows that there's a lot to celebrate, especially when it comes to health, education, and legal protections. But, it also shows significant gaps and that we still have a long way to go until we achieve full gender equality at home and around the world. You can read the full report and see the corresponding data visualizations at NoCeilings.org. You can also learn about the state of women's economic participation from Fortune Magazine here.

3. Launch of data visualization website: NoCeilings.org

As I mentioned above, we've launched an interactive website where users can explore the data from the report firsthand and learn more about some of the remarkable women and girls who drive our work all around the world. As Secretary Clinton puts it, the data is "snackable"—you can learn something fast or take a deep dive into the areas that interest you most. I hope you'll visit the website, NoCeilings.org, to explore the data further.

Later this morning, Secretary Clinton, Chelsea, and Melinda Gates will be hosting Not There Yet: A Data Driven Analysis of Gender Equality where global leaders and engaged participants are coming together to officially release data from The Full Participation Report. You can watch the event live at 11am ET on clintonfoundation.org/noceilings.

I hope you enjoy the report, the website, and the event!

Maura

Shorter script that's still similar enough that she'll recognize it:

Hello. I thought you might find it useful to have some answers to share with your friends if they ask about all these news stories out there about my email habits when I was Secretary of State. So I want to take some time to try and explain it to you directly, in one place, at one time, as best as I can.

Please bear with me because parts are confusing, and like many of you, I don't understand all of the technological aspects. [But when you hear all the facts, I think you'll agree that all the political noise over this issue is just that – political noise.]

In 2007, when I was a U.S. Senator, I got my first Blackberry. I used it to keep up with the news, with friends & family - and yes, I also got my fair share of unsolicited forwards that sometimes made me laugh and sometimes made me want to throw it away. In short, I used email like most people.

Fast forward to 2009. One of my husband's staff members bought the domain name clintonemail.com so his team could switch from the various email providers they were relying on to one consolidated system. I joined them.

This was all before I started my new job as Secretary of State. Had President Obama not asked me to join his team, if I had stayed in the U.S. Senate, I still would have switched to this new email.

And when I did get to State, it seemed simpler to have just the one address. After all, my predecessors at State had not relied on Department email. In hindsight, though, this has proven anything but simple.

That's the explanation - but it's no excuse. There's a difference between allowed to do and smart to do. I shouldn't have done it this way. I should have set the standard that others were expected to meet. To do it all again, I would have used two email addresses.

But I can't do it all again. I can only tell you it was a mistake, regret it, explain it, and help State and others fix any challenges it caused.

That's what I did. Now I want to explain what I didn't do.

I didn't keep my email secret. Whenever I emailed, it was from my address. Whenever people emailed me, it was to my account. Work, personal, whatever. And yes, I continued to get my fair share of unsolicited forwards.

I also didn't do this to skirt rules. And I didn't do it to avoid having my records preserved. When State asked former Secretaries of State who served in the era of electronic communications to help fill out the archival record, I did so, printing 55,000 pages of email including anything related to my work at the State Department. To get a sense of how outdated some of the government's archiving practices are, we had to print all 55,000 pages because that's what the rules demand. Believe me, printing more than 30,000 email instead of handing them over electronically isn't something anyone does by choice.

That's 30,000 more emails than every other former Secretary produced combined .

And yes, there were 30,000 more messages that were completely personal and had nothing to do with official business.

I do believe transparency in government is important. And by this point, there isn't much you don't know about me. My finances are out there. My medical history is out there. You know how much I've made, where I've gone, what I'm allergic to.

But what wasn't work wasn't the government's business. So I didn't keep those emails. I didn't print them. I knew no matter what I decided to do with them, I was in for criticism. So I chose to keep a modicum of privacy. I hope you can understand that.

Now I want to address the most serious aspect.

When it came to classified information, I certainly never used my Blackberry. And that had nothing to do with using a personal email address. If I had been hillaryclinton@state.gov I could not have used it for classified information either. At the State Department, mobile devices aren't used to communicate secrets. Almost everything of a classified nature was presented to me via paper or in person. When I traveled, elaborate steps were taken. Secure phones were set up, secure tents were constructed. More than once when a tent was set up in some far-away hotel, I was told to read the classified material with the blanket over my head. No, that's not a joke. I took my responsibilities in safeguarding our nation's secrets seriously. So did my team did. Everyone at the State Department did .

This process of looking backwards to see if something should have been classified at the time is fine. I don't want anything released to the public that puts us at risk. And we're all learning that different agencies have very different views and procedures about what should be classified and what shouldn't. What's not fine is to criticize people - especially career officials who have devoted their lives to serving our country -- for handling what they didn't know might be deemed classified years later by another part of the government. That's an impossible standard to meet. Members of Congress and their staff also handled some of these messages. Some articles being written about this issue today contain classified information. Should someone sending that article to a colleague be told in 2020 that they broke the rules? I hope not.

As for the security of my email, in more than a little bit of irony, every day we learn of a new hack by the Chinese, by the Russians. That millions of Americans' personal information has been stolen.

As Secretary I was proud of what we accomplished. I was proud of the thousands of people who've dedicated themselves to public service - including those who came into State with me and left with me. I was proud of them then, I'm proud of them now.

I wish that a video was enough to address this. I know it isn't though. But I wanted to try to put everything in one place.

Along those lines, after nearly a year of offering to come up at any time anyplace, in October I'll be on Capitol Hill before the committee looking at the tragic events of September 2012 in Benghazi, Libya. They wanted to talk to me behind closed doors, but I insisted on all of you being able to see what I was asked and how I answered.

I'm sure this issue will come up. It's unclear to me how it will help us understand what happened in Benghazi or how to help prevent future tragedies - but I'm going to do my best to answer whatever they ask.

And while I can't predict the future, let me finish by taking a stab:

• There will be many more email to pour through.

- Some will be serious, some will be embarrassing.

• You know I'm not great with a fax, but you're also going to learn my secret salad dressing recipe and who sent me LinkedIn requests. (And whose I didn't accept!)

- There will be more dramatic leaks and assertions that prove to be untrue.

But at some point, you're going to have them all. And if you suffer through all 55,000 pages, you'll be able to judge for yourself.

Which is how it's supposed to work.

If you've made it this far, thank you for watching.

Dear Mac,

Really so wonderful to hear from you. As Tony said, so hard to believe 5 decades have passed since Nose. You know, I clearly remember (like yesterday) when you recited a JFK speech (was it Japan Night or American Night?) at Nose. I remember that you held a JFK silver dollar in your hand while you recited. Brought tears to my eyes then. Good grief, wasn't it just a few years ago?

I am very proud and happy to read of your successful career, and I could almost have predicted it given your keen intelligence and passion these many years ago.

Of course, I also remember Keiko. Very well. Please convey my best regards to her when you see her. I wonder if you also have kept in touch with Itachi-San?

Brief update, dear Mac: I went to law school for awhile, have Master's Degree in Journalism/Public Relations, some publications. I was a commercial banker for several years, and then a fed regulator for another several years (US Comptroller of the Currency). Married an Olympian and world champion gold medalist, who has since passed away. Have one beautiful brilliant son who is a classical pianist. I am now enjoying retirement years (way too much), but ought to be doing something more productive. I'm working in it. :-)

ATTACHED: a few photos of Nose I managed to preserve over the past 50 years. Keiko is in some of them. Perhaps you can share with her. At the moment, I cannot locate pictures of you, although I thought I had some.

[I am surprised to read you celebrated Nose anniversary last year because isn't 2015 actually the 50th anniversary? Perhaps we are counting differently. Not certain.]

Beyond happy to hear from you, dear Mac. Please do stay in touch. Give all from Nose days my best wishes.

Sincere and best regards,

Jan

Subject: Clean Air Act under attack

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John:

The Clean Air Act is under attack in the Senate!

Senator Lisa Murkowski of Alaska has proposed a resolution that would block the Environmental Protection Agency's ability to limit global warming pollution under the Clean Air Act. This dangerous proposal now has 38 co-sponsors, and others in the Senate are under pressure from Big Coal to add their support.

LCV is partnering with our friends at CREDO Mobile to send a petition to Senators demanding that they reject this attempt to weaken the Clean Air Act.

Add your voice - click here to sign the petition now.

If dirty polluters and their friends in the Senate get their way, the biggest sources of global warming pollution would be exempted from the Clean Air Act. This dangerous move would negatively impact our fight against global warming, undermining American energy independence and the creation of millions of clean energy jobs.

This brazen attack on the Clean Air Act must be stopped.

Sign the petition now and add your name to the thousands of Americans who demand that the Clean Air Act remain intact.

After you sign the petition, you will have an opportunity to help the environment even more. By signing the petition, CREDO Mobile will award you 100 points that you can use to vote for LCV Education Fund on CREDO Mobile's 2010 Donation Ballot.

Since its inception, CREDO Mobile has donated more than $65 million to non-profit organizations, and LCV Education Fund is honored to be included in their generosity. When you vote for LCV Education Fund in this ballot, you are ensuring that we receive more money to educate the public about environmental issues and priorities.

Please, sign the petition, and designate your 100 points to LCV Education Fund on CREDO's 2010 Donation Ballot.

Thank you for all that you do for the environment.

Sincerely,

Gene Karpinski
President
League of Conservation Voters

P.S. You can take your activism for the environment one step further by switching your cell phone service to CREDO Mobile, the greenest phone company around. Click here to learn more!

Americans United for Change Launch New Radio Ad Encouraging Nevadans to Cheer On Senator Harry Reid as He Leads the Final Charge to Pass Health Insurance Reform Including a Public Option

Washington D.C. – As the debate over health insurance reform enters the home stretch in the nation's capital, Americans United for Change launched a new radio campaign today encouraging Nevadans to cheer on Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid as leads the final charge to pass reform, including a public option, this year. The ad will air for a week in the Reno and Las Vegas media markets starting today. See script for "Finish Line" below.

Tom McMahon, Acting Executive Director, Americans United for Change: "This effort is about giving Senate Majority Leader Reid the support he needs as he continues to take on the big health insurance industry, which is spending millions of dollars to kill health insurance reform in the 11th hour – especially reform that includes a strong public option. Through this effort, we hope to send a message to all Senators that advocates of health insurance reform will have their backs if they vote for health insurance reform – including a public option – and that they will have the political high ground in doing so."

A new Washington Post-ABC poll released yesterday found: "57 percent of all Americans now favor a public insurance option."

"The big insurance industry is not very happy with Senator Reid for leading the charge to repeal its baffling exemption from anti-trust laws – an exemption that they've exploited for decades," added McMahon. "With 94 percent of insurance markets in the United States now highly concentrated, insurance companies across the nation take full advantage of this total lack of competition by refusing to cover millions of people with pre-existing conditions, rescinding policies when people get sick, and raising premiums four times faster than wages – all done to maximize industry profits and compensate its CEO's tens of millions of dollars. And as a direct result, millions of sick Americans are left out in the cold with nowhere to go. We applaud Senator Reid's efforts to create real competition in the health insurance market by repealing the industry's exemption from the anti-trust laws and by passing health insurance reform including a public option. ### Script: "Finish Line"

The fight to provide health care to every American has been a marathon.

The race began decades ago and many leaders have carried the baton.

The insurance companies have done everything possible to put obstacles in our path.

They want to be free to use pre-existing conditions to deny care ... to cut people off when they get sick... to keep raising premiums. And they sure don't want to compete with a public health insurance plan.

Luckily the guy whose has been handed the baton to run that last lap – is Nevada’s Senator Harry Reid.

Cheer him on. Call Senator Reid at 702-388-5020 -- tell him to keep fighting until we win.

If the goal is to name SC, but there's concern about calling out black men specifically, we could revise the sentence to say something like:

"In South Carolina, a lawyer spoke movingly about too many young men who have ended up imprisoned for non-violent drug offenses rather than getting the treatment they needed."

Here's what the lawyer said in the transcript:

"QUESTION: My name is Carlyle Steele and I practice criminal law here in Greenville, and I've been shocked over the last 40 years at the mass incarceration of young men, particularly young African American men. Locking everybody up for minor offenses and nonviolent offenses isn't working out. " crisis head-on. Does this work for everyone?

Hi all -

Sorry I was out of pocket for a few hours. On a flight now to raise $$ for all of us in Oklahoma - the things we do!!

Anyhow, here is the deal:

(1) The American Academy of Pediatrics came out with a strong policy statement in 2011 that every child/teenager should be screened for substance abuse disorders when they visit the doctor for their annual child check up or for an accute care visit in which it might be suspected. HRC has a long history of working with AAP and supporting their efforts to do more screenings. When she was First Lady, she worked on the Newborn Hearing Screening to make sure all babies get hearing screenings, and in the last several years she has pushed for and supported the AAP's effort to screen young kids for symptoms of "toxic stress." This is not "mandatory," but it is part of prevention and wellness and it is about supporting the AAP in making this happen by raising awareness, making sure pediatricians get reimbursed for their time in doing these screenings, etc. I have tried to clarify with edits to the speech, pasted below and attached.

(2) On Mandy's question about mental health parity, I have added a line.

(3) On Karen's question of whether we reached out to urban leaders, we talked to a number of policy experts who serve urban communities. Maya is going to work with political to be sure we do political outreach to leaders in next 48 hours.

(4) On Karen's suggestion, that she alludes to problems in her own family - I have modified accordingly.

(5) On Nick's question about specialized care, we are good with it as Kristina noted - but let me know if you have further concerns.

I am also attaching our final fact sheet. If all are good, we should get her this draft op-ed together with the fact sheet. Let me know if you have more questions or concerns.

Thanks,

Ann

DRAFT substance abuse op-ed

WC: 822 words

I was on my first trip to New Hampshire this spring, in a Keene bakery, when a retired doctor spoke up. I had just announced I was running for president, and I had traveled to Iowa and New Hampshire to hear directly from voters about their concerns, their hopes, and their vision for the future. He said his biggest worry was the rising tide of heroin addiction in the state, the result of a wave of prescription drug abuse. He said hospitals were seeing more babies born addicted, that police officers were responding to more overdoses, that families were being torn apart.

To be candid, I didn't expect what came next. In several states, this issue crept up again and again – from so many people, from all walks of life, in small towns and big cities.

In Iowa, from Davenport to Council Bluffs, people spoke to me about meth and prescription drugs, and scores of lives upended. In South Carolina, a lawyer spoke movingly about the holes in the community left by generations of black men who ended up imprisoned for non-violent drug offenses rather than getting the treatment they needed.

These stories shine light on some harrowing statistics. Nearly 23 million Americans suffer from addiction, but in 2014, only 2.5 million were able to receive treatment at a specialized facility. Fifty-two million Americans over the age of 12 have abused prescription drugs, including one in four teenagers. In 2014, more Americans died from overdoses than car crashes.

Enough is enough. It's time we recognize as a nation that we have a quiet epidemic on our hands. Plain and simple, drug addiction is a disease, not a moral failing—and we must treat it as such.

It's time we recognize as a nation that there are gaps in our health care system that allow too many sufferers to go without care—and invest substantially more in prevention and treatment.

It's time we recognize as a nation that our state and federal prisons, where 65 percent of inmates meet the medical criteria for substance use disorders, are no substitute for drug treatment—and reform our criminal justice system.

That's why I'm releasing a comprehensive strategy [\[LINK\]](#) to confront the drug addiction crisis head-on. My plan sets four goals: first, ensuring every American family has access to affordable and effective treatments; second, ensuring that we work with pediatricians to be sure that every child and teenager is educated about and screened for substance use disorders as part of their annual doctor's visit, just as we do for hearing, eyesight, developmental delays and so much more; third, ensuring all first responders have access to naloxone, which stops overdoses from becoming fatal; and fourth, requiring that all health-care providers receive training in recognizing substance use disorders and consult a prescription drug monitoring program before providing opiates.

Achieving these goals won't be easy. It's going to take real commitment from all corners—law enforcement, doctors, insurance companies, schools, and governments. That's why my plan starts by increasing funding for the Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant by 25 percent, so states and localities have more resources to work with, and changing rules that arbitrarily limit how many patients can be treated with medication assisted treatment, a proven intervention for opiate addiction. I will also direct the federal government to re-evaluate Medicare and Medicaid payment practices, to remove obstacles to reimbursement for patients seeking help and promote greater coordination of care. And I will make sure that our mental health parity laws are fully enforced so that insurance practices are not a barrier to substance abuse treatment.

But we can't stop there. As President, I will do everything I can to partner with states and communities across America to meet the four goals—treatment, prevention, overdose intervention, and improved prescriber practices. We'll ask states to design ambitious plans for tackling these four goals using the programs that make most sense for their citizens' needs and challenges. In return for strong plans to address the substance abuse crisis, the federal government will draw on a new $5 billion fund to help states meet their goals.

Every town I've visited so far in this campaign has stories of families upended by drug addiction. But across the country, I've also heard about second chances. The young mother who overcame addictions to alcohol and heroin so her son would never see her with a drink or a drug in her hand. The man who served 11 years in prison who is now serving others through a prison ministry.

They all say the same thing: no matter how much time has passed, no matter how different their lives are today, they're all still in recovery. It's a process—one that began when a family member, a friend, a doctor, a police officer extended a hand to help. As one New Hampshire woman said, "We're not bad people trying to get good, we're sick people who deserve to get well."

There are 23 million Americans suffering from addiction. There are untold millions more. No one is untouched – we all have family and friends who are affected. We can't afford to stay on the sidelines any longer—because when families are strong, America is strong. Through improved treatment, prevention, and training, we can end this quiet epidemic once and for all.

On the screening point, will let policy get into details, but it's the major pillar of the 'prevention' goal. Would folks be more comfortable if it said something like [CAPS=ADDITION] "ensuring every child and teenager is annually screened for substance use DISORDERS, JUST AS THEY schools and doctors regularly screen for all sorts of diseases, and substance abuse screening /= random drug testing.

On the "specialized facilities," the stat comes from the NIH's National Institute on Drug Abuse and includes all facilities licensed or certified by state substance abuse agencies to provide treatment. So think it's easy to answer Politifact when they try to get cute.

John, this is important:

We've got 21 days to go and the Republicans are launching a full-scale attack against Democrat John Foust in Virginia's 10th district.

But here's the thing: I'm not worried about the GOP.

I'm worried about Karl Rove, the Kochs, and their vast network of outside groups. These guys have a bottomless pit of special interest cash to attack our strongest Democratic candidates.

With John's race too close to call, we can't let some Super PAC decide who wins and who loses.

So John, quick favor: will you rush $5 or more to John's campaign today?

Yes, he was! We have not name called him because he wasn't one who made decision in Flint and we didn't want to make it only about him, but it is pretty outrageous.

According to people magazine, Darnell Earley, who just stepped down from overseeing the Detroit schools was the city manager in Flint!!

Agree with Karen we should probably beef up the sentence on page 10:

We are giving this to HRC for background for debate and events this weekend -- Megan, I'd cull from here to make the Detroit School line more focused on outrage and need for immediate solutions:

K-12 INSERT / DETROIT SCHOOLS: The Detroit Schools are in awful condition. What would you do about it? Do you support local control of the school district?

- Lets recognize for a moment that there's a pattern here. Another low-income, largely African-American city with a problem that is devastating a generation of children. Another state appointed Emergency Manager. Another round of excuses and finger pointing as the problem gets worse and your Governor sits on his hands.
- Detroit's children are sitting in classrooms with rodents and mold. Ceilings are caving in. The heat is barely functioning. 6 percent of fourth graders are proficient in reading. 5 percent are proficient in math.
- That's unacceptable in America. Detroit has fought too hard. Its families have sacrificed too much. Its time for action.
- Its time for Governor Snyder to give Detroit's schools back to Detroit. Its time to rebuild our crumbling schools and invest in our students and teachers. Its time to give every child clean water, a safe classroom, and a world class education.

Recognize we have to do jobs/trade message - BUT - Given what's happening in Detroit regarding schools and the lawsuit AFT recently filed against the city can we really go there and not even mention it given what an advocate she has been in Flint? There are serious complaints about potential health issues related to mold, but DPS has apparently blocked health inspectors from the teacher's union. Seems a bit tone deaf not to say something but to suggest that good things are happening in Eastern Detroit.

Teachers union says DPS blocked its health inspectors

Officials from Detroit's teachers union blasted Detroit Public Schools on Wednesday after the district blocked the union's environmental experts from investigating possible mold growth, water damage and other problems inside nine schools.

"Our members are demanding that we give them specific answers as to what's going on in their schools," Ivy Bailey, interim president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers, said at a news conference outside Spain-Elementary Middle School.

AFT sues Detroit schools over decrepit conditions

Mold, rodents and water-damaged ceilings were among the unsafe classroom conditions cited in a recently filed lawsuit against the Detroit Public Schools by the American Federation of Teachers-Michigan, the Detroit Federation of Teachers and parent groups. David Hecker, the president of the AFT-Michigan, said the action was taken to force the district to respond after years of neglect. The January lawsuit — and rolling teacher sick-outs — drew national attention to the long-neglected schools.

Detroit Public Schools will be completely broke by April. Here's how things got to this point.

John, if you compare last night's serious, substantive, issue-focused debate to what we heard from the GOP on Thursday (featuring shouting, insults, hand-measuring, and a unanimous pledge by the other candidates to support Donald Trump if he becomes the nominee), it's an absolutely great time to be a Democrat.

Thousands of Democrats have already voted for their favorite sticker design. Join them now -- and then pre-order a limited-edition set of the top three vote-getters so you can carry your Democratic Party pride with you on your laptop or phone:

Subject: Disclosure update from Frank

Here is where we are with Frank disclosing donors to CGEP-Canada:

They have close to 2000 donors so getting written permission from all of them is not feasible (both because of resources and likelihood that 2000 people who have now seen the bad press will agree to be disclosed).

So... they are now calling the top 30 donors ($300K and up) to see how many will agree. At least three have said no, but have others have said yes. They say they will have full accounting Mon/Tues of next week (many people are out of town and hard to get in touch with).

Frank is open to a new policy which would say going forward they will disclose all donors (his staff wants to talk him back from this because they believe it will discourage donors). I expect Frank will make the decision soon.

Subject: JDP New Media Request: BBC America

Outlet: BBC America

Filming: Next week anytime, in DC

Specific Topics: Strengths of Hillary Clinton as a potential presidential candidate, the challenges she would face if she decides to run and how she would be a different candidate compared to 2008.

Uses/To be aired: interview will be used in TV and radio pieces for BBC's main news programmes - BBC World News America (TV in the US and internationally), BBC Ten O'Clock News (TV in the UK), BBC Radio 4 Today programme and BBC World Service Radio Newshour (broadcast by NPR stations in the US).

The interviewer will be Jon Sopel, the BBC North America Editor.

The exact broadcast date will depend on the date of a potential announcement by HRC.

Format of the interview, a sit-down, anywhere really, or at BBC studio- "It would be great to also get a couple of setup shots of Jon and Mr Podesta walking and talking - you know the usual boring shots we need for editing purposes."

ALERT: GOP Health Plan Makes People Lose Their Employer-Sponsored Care

Just like McCain's plan, the new GOP plan would make people lose the health care they have now by dismantling the employer-based system.

- Recycling ideas from the McCain plan that voters soundly rejected in November, the "new" GOP plan would remove the main tax incentive that employers have for providing care to their employees.

The new GOP plan replaces the coverage people have with an insufficient tax subsidy that doesn't even cover half of the average family's health care premiums.

- The \$5,700 tax subsidy for families proposed in the Republican plan is less than half of the \$12,680 that the average American family paid for health care in 2008.

Currently in the individual market, insurance companies can force people with pre-existing conditions to pay exorbitant rates or even deny them care.

- If you are one of the 56 million Americans with a pre-existing condition – like high blood pressure, hay fever or diabetes – insurance companies can force you to pay exorbitant rates or even deny you care on the individual market.

Unlike McCain, the GOP plan recognizes that the individual market has severe problems—but the solutions they propose are far too weak to fix them.

- Unlike past conservative proposals, the GOP plan includes an insurance exchange – but it is far too weak to address the severe problems with the individual market.

- In addition to the insufficient tax credit, the GOP plan does not provide incentives for insurance companies to join the state exchanges, and it does not regulate companies that decide not to join.
- In short, their fix fails – and individuals are left at risk of higher prices, being denied care or being forced to pay exorbitant rates if they happen to be one of the 56 million Americans with a pre-existing condition like high blood pressure, hay fever or diabetes.

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Dear John,

This has been another exciting month in the world of climate politics, so I wanted to send a quick note with a few key highlights. Thank you for your continued partnership in this work. As you will read from the update below, your investment in LCV continues to help build real political power for the environmental movement.

Onward,

Gene

Gina McCarthy Confirmed to Lead Environmental Protection Agency

After the longest wait for a permanent EPA Administrator in the agency's history, Gina McCarthy was finally confirmed with a strong bipartisan vote in the Senate. This is a big, positive step forward. We are looking forward to working closely with her to help realize President Obama's vision for making meaningful progress on climate change, starting with setting common sense limits on industrial carbon pollution from power plants. Click here to read our full statement in support of her confirmation.

New McAuliffe Ad Hits Cuccinelli on Climate; Touts Virginia LCV Support

This week, Virginia gubernatorial candidate Terry McAuliffe released a new television ad highlighting Ken Cuccinelli's ideological witch hunt in 2010 against Michael Mann, then a climate scientist at the University of Virginia, for pursuing research with which Cuccinelli did not agree. The investigation, driven by Cuccinelli's extreme anti-science agenda, was deemed baseless by the Virginia Supreme Court.

The ad also touts McAuliffe's endorsement by the Virginia League of Conservation Voters. They support him for his commitment to protecting and restoring Virginia's natural resources, his dedication to a strong renewable energy future for the Commonwealth, and his support of Virginia's science and research communities. The new ad, "Witch Hunt," can be viewed here: <http://bit.ly/18IZ9Yc>.

Virginia LCV PAC has also built the first state LCV online bundling site GiveGreen Virginia -- to support candidates in Virginia starting with Terry McAuliffe. Please check it out here: <https://va-givegreen.zissousecure.com/>.

LCV Releases Bipartisan Poll on Young Voters and Climate Change

As the impacts of climate change take hold on a near daily basis—from record heat waves, wildfires, floods, and storms—the American way of life is being violently transformed. And Americans are taking notice—especially younger voters whose future is at stake.

Last week, LCV released a bipartisan poll showing that young voters across the country are concerned about climate change, intensely supportive of federal action to address it, and are willing to punish those who ignore the problem. Moreover, young voters overwhelmingly describe climate change deniers as "ignorant" and "out-of-touch," reflecting the generational divide and underscoring the disconnect between their real world experience and the politically charged views of deniers.

Over the next several years, LCV and our allies plan to aggressively expose climate deniers and those opposing any action on the issue—a message that our data indicates will resonate well with voters.

Politico's "50 Politicos to Watch" Features LCV Staffer

Our own Navin Nayak, Senior Vice President of Campaigns, made the Politico's 2013 list of "50 Politicos to Watch"! The glowing profile of Navin also points out that "no group has played a bigger part in [climate change's return to prominence] than the League of Conservation Voters." We're very proud of Navin and our entire team for this well-deserved recognition. To read the complete article, please click here.

Keystone XL Pipeline: All Risk; No Reward

As part of our efforts to spotlight the high bar the President has now set for the Keystone XL pipeline, in July we hosted a successful press teleconference with Senator Sheldon Whitehouse (RI) and Representative Henry Waxman (CA-33) to discuss their excellent letter to the State Department on the climate impacts of Keystone and tar sands. During a call with the press, they highlighted how the dangerous project does not meet the climate standard set by President Obama in his sweeping climate change speech last month and should be rejected by the administration.

LCV's Capital Dinner a Huge Success

Thanks to your support, LCV's annual Capital Dinner in Washington, D.C. this past June was a huge success. Senators Elizabeth Warren and Al Franken were our featured speakers and both gave inspirational speeches about the urgent need to combat the climate crisis. This was the biggest LCV event to date and had over 560 people in attendance. Click here to watch the Senators' enlightening and humorous speeches and view the photos from the dinner.

I'm glad that so many presidential candidates are here today. It's a signal that the work you've been doing for decades is getting the political attention it deserves. But the real test of a candidate's commitment is not whether we come to speak at your national conference, as important as that is. It's whether we're still around after the cameras are gone and the votes are counted. It's whether our positions live up to our rhetoric.

And too often we see a mismatch between what some candidates say in venues like this, and what they plan to actually do if they're elected.

I don't think you can credibly say that everyone has a "right to rise" – and then say you're for phasing out Medicare, or for repealing Obamacare. People can't rise if they can't afford health care. They can't rise if the minimum wage is too low to live on.

And you can't seriously talk about the right to rise... and support laws that deny the right to vote.

What people say matters – but what they do matters more. And Americans deserve leaders who'll face inequity head on, in all its complexity – who won't just concede that there are barriers holding people back, but who'll do what it takes to tear those barriers down, once and for all.

John,
What itch do you think we need to scratch?
The risk reward here is not in our favor. This issue in any form, is hardly front and center in the lives and minds of voters and on the other side any perception of focusing on an issue that could be viewed as playing to a political audience would be problematic. There are 180 million people registered to vote. I just don't think they're going to view registering to vote as so difficult.
Am I missing something here?

I do think we should explore ways to Co-opt GOP's argument for photo ID which has enormous appeal. Even among some Dem voters. We should think of high tech solutions ( ie everyone is issued a voter card with a chip when they turn 18) that embrace some form of universal citizen ID linked to automatic registration.

If folks are interested, here's a write-up we had done on modernizing the registration system...
Modernize Voter Registration

Experts agree that the single biggest barrier to voting is a shoddy voter registration system. Researchers at Harvard and MIT found that in both 2008 and 2012, millions of Americans tried to but were unable to vote because of problems relating to voter registration, and millions more thwarted by registration deadlines and residency requirements. The non-partisan Election Protection voter hotline consistently reports voter registration problems as the most prevalent.

Moving toward more universal voter registration has the potential not only to resolve persistent barriers that thwart voters but also to significantly expand the electorate. According to Census data, more than one in four voting-eligible Americans—more than 50 million people—are not registered to vote. Among those who are registered, roughly 70% vote in midterm and 85-90% in presidential elections. (Overall eligible citizen turnout rates are 40% in midterms and 60% in presidential elections.)

Modernizing the voter registration system could add up to 50 million unregistered citizens to the rolls, cheaply, conveniently, and accurately. Once a citizen is registered, she can be courted and mobilized to vote.

All that is required is a simple shift in paradigm to one in which the government takes responsibility to ensure that the voter rolls are complete and accurate, drawing on modern database technology and government agency contacts. Under a modern voter registration system, every eligible citizen who consents would be seamlessly registered to vote whenever interacting with a government agency and her information would be securely transmitted electronically to election officials; her registration record would be automatically kept up to date and would move with her; and she would have failsafe opportunities to register to vote or to update her registration both online and at the polls on Election Day. Each of these policy components is currently in place and working successfully in multiple states, but no state has them all.

Research by the Brennan Center and other institutions show that these reforms increase voter registration rates, improve list accuracy, and save millions.

Legislation: The Voter Empowerment Act (Reps. Lewis, Hoyer, Clyburn, Conyers, and Brady, H.R. 12, and Sen. Gillibrand, S.123) is a broad Democratic voting reform bill introduced in 2012 and 2013 that had voter registration modernization as its centerpiece. This bill was not reintroduced in 2014. Sen. Gillibrand, and previously Rep. Lofgren, also introduced the Voter Registration Modernization Act (S. 2865) focusing exclusively on online registration.

Political considerations: As noted, the public broadly supports modernizing voter registration and bringing our antiquated paper-based system into the 21st century. Portable registration in particular has overwhelming support. Voter registration modernization also has strong bipartisan support in the states (though not in Congress), especially among election officials. The bipartisan Presidential Commission on Election Administration especially endorsed two components of the reform—online voter registration and electronic registration at the DMV and possibly other government agencies as well. The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights has consistently included voter registration modernization among its top three voting priorities since 2010. And privacy advocates have signed off on voter registration modernization proposals so long as they have certain safeguards built in.

Agree with Teddy that universal online reg is good place to start. Very few concerns on that, but many more concerns about online voting across the electorate.

I agree with that - though there are some security/fraud and some "big brother" type concerns that we would need to expect some blowback on. An easier place to start would be universal online voter registration - right now only 20-some-odd states allow online registration, with the rest requiring delivery of a paper form. What an anachronism - how many millennials do you know with easy access to a printer, envelopes, and stamps?

Erskine: I hope you have had a good end to 2015 and that 2016 is off to a good start. I'm asking a favor. My daughter Hannah (CV attached) graduates from Carolina in May. She anticipates receiving a BA in media and journalism, with a public relations specialization and a minor in Hispanic studies. She has submitted recently an online application for a position with the Clinton campaign. Ideally, she would work tirelessly from the point of graduation through the election of the next President and take it from there. And to be clear, she is not bound by geography at this stage of her life. It is safe to say that Hannah shares the view that initiated this email exchange back in October (and appended below); she would express it more clearly (and in fewer characters) to voters in need of direction in 2016.

Any advice you might have for her would be deeply appreciated. Best and warmest regards, Lee

My op ed piece would begin like this

To the extent it was possible, a few congressman diminished the institution further yesterday in their feckless questioning of an extraordinary diplomat. Unfortunately, their predictable attacks and baseless innuendo weakens our nation, increases the risks those who serve the cause of diplomacy face, and discourages even the most courageous from public service. They should be ashamed. And the next President of the United states explained once again why she is the one candidate, from both parties, who has the range of intellect and selfless love of country to move us to where we aspire to be.

Clinton Decision Expected Soon

Democrats close to Sen. Hillary Clinton have told associates that by close of business on Friday, they hope to know, one way or the other, whether Clinton will become President-elect Barack Obama's Secretary of State. Others say that while they expect a decision very soon, although no time-frame has been given.

Fewer than a half dozen Clinton aides and advisers are privy to the details of the vetting and to the state of Clinton's thinking about the job.

Given the size of the colander holes in Washington these days, the decision, whenever it is made, will probably leak fairly rapidly.

The Politico's Mike Allen reported Wednesday that loose ends will be wrapped up in short order, and that an announcement of Clinton's position could come before Thanksgiving.

Transition officials caution that the timing of any announcement is subject to change. One Democrat in daily contact with transition officials said the Clinton appointment "is all but a done deal," although that official did not know whether Clinton has formally accepted a formal offer.

So maybe we know nothing more than we know already.

A Clinton spokesman referred all requests for comment to the transition team; a transition spokesman declined to comment.

This is a big line of Gowdy questioning. How did you strike balance? Elsewhere you so close up shop when things get dangerous.

One further thought on the current draft: we might consider softening the "Chris did not believe retreat was an option – and neither do I" line. I don't think we want to suggest that there was a commitment to be there at any and all costs; but rather, that the known risks were being balanced with the reasons for being there, regular assessments of this balance were made, and that the people on the ground were best-positioned to contribute to those assessments.

I think it is good. Imagine the clip they will use is the partisan slugfest sentence. I don't love "backs of dead Americans" in that sentence. I think that is too graphic and splashes back on her as appearing to exploit their deaths.

I like it. Just two thoughts.

We twice call the ARB "independent"—I'd prefer to call it "non-partisan" as we do once in the draft. Hard Choices did not call it "independent", and since it's appointed by and responsible to the Secretary, I think we open an avenue of attack by calling it "independent".

Can we get some more numbers into the early "diplomacy is dangerous" discussion? Sixty-six American diplomatic personnel and over a hundred contractors and locally employed staff killed since the 1970's (or whatever the numbers are). I recognize we have some numbers on page 3 (Beirut bombing, 1998 attacks).

The Islamic Worldview is the first volume of Islamic Jurisprudence: An American Muslim Perspective, a groundbreaking series that revisits traditional Islamic jurisprudence in order to develop a modern enlightened understanding of Islam with respect to gender, marriage, family, and democratic governance.

With Qur'anic textual analysis and commentary, it provides both the Muslim and non-Muslim reader with a basic understanding of the legal foundations of Islam. It introduces the sources of Islamic law and their significance in the hierarchy of Islamic jurisprudence while presenting Dr. al-Hibri's articulation of the Islamic worldview, developed in light of modern day concerns, such as those relating to gender, race and class. The Islamic Worldview introduces the Qur'an as the supreme source of Islamic law and discusses basic rules and principles that have been noted by jurists over time in understanding and interpreting it, and how these rules can and have been applied toward the evolution of a uniquely Islamic global perspective.

[Subtitle:] Neil Cavuto's Statement Comes After Many Previous Attempts By Fox To Scandalize Clinton's Age

Fox News host Neil Cavuto took aim at one of his own network's favorite smears against Hillary Clinton -- that she's too old to run for president.

Fox News has gone to great lengths to scandalize Clinton's age in the run up to 2016 -- Hosts have questioned whether being a grandmother would hurt Clinton politically, and when Fox contributor Karl Rove claimed Hillary Clinton suffered from brain damage after a fall, network figures ran defense for him and amplified the smear. One contributor even accused Clinton of needing plastic surgery before running for president. (Notably, both John McCain and Ronald Reagan, Fox favorites, were older when they ran for president than Clinton will be if she decides to enter the 2016 race.)

But this week Fox host Neil Cavuto broke from his colleagues, blasting a likely 2016 Republican presidential candidate for making the same smears against Clinton.

In a November 9 Politico interview detailing his 2016 presidential aspirations, Sen. Paul (R-KY) suggested that former Secretary of State Clinton, who is 67, may be too old to successfully campaign for president. Paul claimed that it's not "certain" Clinton would win the Democratic nomination because "it's a very taxing undertaking to go through. It's a rigorous physical ordeal, I think, to be able to campaign for the presidency."

Cavuto called out Paul on the November 11 edition of Fox News' Your World, calling his criticism of Clinton "so base and so cheap." Such "over-the-top-cheap shots" could undermine GOP efforts to expand their base, Cavuto said, noting the sexist nature of the attack and emphasizing that Paul has not criticized the age of other politicians like Reagan, Winston Churchill, and Paul's own father Rep. Ron Paul (R-TX). Cavuto went on to highlight Clinton's achievements as Secretary of State, saying "I think it's fair to say that Hillary Clinton was up to the physical rigors of the job and then some."

Fox News host Neil Cavuto has slammed Sen. Rand Paul's for his "condescending swipe" at Hillary Clinton over whether she's too old for the "rigorous physical ordeal" of a presidential campaign.

Cavuto said that the Republican Kentucky senator had done more damage with his "cheap shots" than New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie did when he shouted at a heckler to "shut up," according to Mediaite.

During an interview with Politico this month, Paul had claimed that Clinton's age, 67, could be a factor in her campaign if she runs.

"I think all the polls show if she does run, she'll win the Democrat nomination," said Paul, 51. "But I don't think it's for certain. It's a very taxing undertaking to go through. It's a rigorous physical ordeal, I think, to be able to campaign for the presidency."

Calling it "nonsense," Cavuto fired back Tuesday at Paul, who has yet to announce whether he plans a presidential bid.

"So what are you saying then senator, that Hillary would be too old because she would be 69 on Inauguration Day," Cavuto said during a broadcast. "Maybe I missed it, but did you say the same about Ronald Reagan when he was running. He was also 69 on Inauguration Day. He seemed to turn out OK.

"So did Winston Churchill. He was 66 when he became prime minister of England, through its darkest hours, despite his age. So what in the world are you getting at senator?

And why does it seem you are only getting at it with Hillary Clinton?"

"So are you going after Hillary Clinton because she's a Democrat or a woman, or both.

Either way you have done more damage with that condescending swipe than Chris Christie could shaking a 1,000 ice cream cones in critics' faces."

Cavuto added that Paul should feel free to attack Clinton on her record as secretary of state when she was in her 60s.

"But I think it's fair to say that Clinton was up to the rigors of the job, and then some," he said, while noting she had logged record miles for any secretary of state in U.S. history.

The Hill: "2016 crowd rushes to define positions on net neutrality"

By Mario Trujillo

November 12, 2014, 10:59 a.m. EST

A handful of potential 2016 candidates are rushing to define their position on net neutrality following President Obama's call for the Federal Communications Commission to impose tougher regulations.

Sen. Ted Cruz (Texas) was one of the first out of the gate, quickly tying Obama's proposal to treat the Internet like other public utilities to ObamaCare.

"The biggest regulatory threat to the Internet is net neutrality," he said. "In short, net neutrality is Obamacare for the Internet."

Obama said the FCC should impose regulations that would prevent some companies from purchasing faster Internet lanes to deliver their services. His comments were seen as a strong defense for net neutrality.

Net neutrality is not expected to play a significant role in the 2016 presidential election. But activists on both sides said the issue is important to base voters in both parties.

"It is something I think both sides can go to their base on this and point to this as a policy that is relevant in 2016," said Wayne Brough, the chief economist at the conservative FreedomWorks, which opposes Obama's plan.

"If one is trying to present oneself as a politician of the modern era who is trying to rally the youth vote in particular, I think that it is a very important position," said David Segal, executive director of Demand Progress, which supports Obama's plan.

Other 2016 contenders weighed in this week as well. Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) expressed opposition, while Sens. Bernie Sanders (D-Vt.) and Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) and Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley (D) supported the president.

Others, including Hillary Clinton, the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination, have not. Sen. Rand Paul's (R-Ky.) office did not respond for a request for comment.

Administration officials said Obama's proposal tracked closely with promises he made during his first presidential campaign in 2008 when he said he would "take a backseat to no one in my commitment to network neutrality."

Obama called on the independent FCC to use the strongest authority possible to enforce open Internet rules online. Reports have indicated FCC chairman Tom Wheeler is pushing for a more nuanced approach.

Supporters of net neutrality want the FCC to finalize rules as soon as possible, but litigation and action by the GOP-led Congress could keep the issue alive throughout the 2016 presidential campaign.

Rubio said a main focus of Congress in the next two years should be to “provide clarity” on the FCC’s regulatory authority of broadband.

Both Rubio and Cruz sit on the Senate Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction on the issue.

Brough, the FreedomWorks economist, said Cruz’s background on the issue could make him particularly vocal.

“He might be more sensitive to it and talk about it more than some of the other candidates might,” Brough said.

Other Republicans have not weighed in. But back in 2012 when his father was still running for president, Paul endorsed an Internet manifesto that disparagingly described the broader concept of net neutrality as another phrase for the government acting as an “arbiter and enforcer.”

Similarly, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal (R) voted against a net neutrality proposal as a member of Congress back in 2006, along with nearly every other Republican at the time.

The issue might be most prominent in a Democratic primary. Activists helped push supporters to submit nearly 4 million comments to the FCC earlier this year, surpassing previous records.

Warren and Sanders both gave ringing endorsements of Obama’s proposal.

Sanders, who is publicly considering a White House run, framed the issue as a fight against an “army of Comcast and Verizon lobbyists” who oppose the strict rules. Warren, who has maintained she will not run for the White House, urged the FCC to put Obama’s plan in place “as soon as possible.”

O’Malley, who is also seen as mulling a White House run, said the Internet should not have “gatekeepers” picking winners and losers online.

Clinton supported net neutrality legislation while in the Senate, and said last month that “it is absolutely clear to me we have to keep the Internet open.”

Public Knowledge, a supporter of Obama’s proposal, cited Clinton when describing the Obama administration’s dedication to the Internet.

“Starting with former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton’s push to open the Internet globally, the administration’s strong antitrust enforcement to support competition in the digital marketplace, and now strong open Internet rules for the U.S., the Obama Administration has demonstrated world leadership to promote freedom of expression,” the group said earlier this week.

Forbes: “Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand On Why Ambition Is Not A Dirty Word”

By Moira Forbes

November 12, 2014, 11:12 a.m. EST

Kirsten Gillibrand, the junior U.S. Senator from New York (D), is issuing a challenge to women everywhere. Her book, Off The Sidelines: Raise Your Voice, Change the World, is a call to action for women to get involved in public life and affect change in their communities. She argues that while women may have made great strides in the business arena, their presence in the political and policy space remains anemic. Her mission? “To elevate women’s voices in the public sphere and bring women more fully into making the decisions that shape our country.”

Gillibrand’s challenge to women, whatever their political persuasion, has a special resonance following the recent midterm elections. While Republicans triumphed at the voting booths, one notable result was how many women won high office. Three female governors retained their posts by landslides, while others achieved remarkable victories such as Joni Ernst in Iowa for U.S. Senate, and Mia Love in Utah who became the first female, African American Republican elected to Congress.

Like many of the women who’ve recently raised their hands to run for office, Gillibrand didn’t launch her career with political ambitions. She first established her reputation in corporate law, quickly rising the ranks, when an invitation in 1999 to attend a women’s leadership event, featuring then-first lady Hillary Clinton, forever changed her path. “Decisions are being made every day in Washington. And if you’re not part of those decisions and you don’t like them, you have no one to blame but yourself,” remarked Clinton in her address. Gillibrand thought to herself, “Oh my god, she [Clinton] is talking to me. I need to get involved in politics.” It was a game-changer for Gillibrand; she decided in that moment to get involved.

“I really had no chance of success when I ran for Congress in 2006, according to anybody who had any knowledge of my district,” recalls Gillibrand, who took a big risk moving from law to public service, and then by running for office. “It was a two-to-one Republican district, and I ran as a Democrat. And the only people who believed I had a chance of winning were my mother and me. And that was it.”

Like many of us, she also questioned whether she was qualified enough to take on this political post. “I felt almost embarrassed to say ‘I want to run for Congress...I just felt, ‘Am I smart enough? Am I tough enough? Can I do this job?’” recalls Gillibrand. “A lot of us doubt ourselves. And it’s something we have to overcome.” But even so, she decided it was far more important to enter the fight than to win. At the very least, she could elevate the dialogue around important issues and hold others accountable for their voting record. In other words, she could actually make a big difference even without winning the election.

“I think that’s true in any arena where a woman is trying to be heard. Whether you win the referendum that you’re fighting for, whether you get the sign put in your crosswalk in your neighborhood, when people know you care, it makes them care,” says Gillibrand. “If they know this is something you really want to fight for, it makes other people fight for it.” The mother of two hammers home the message that you don’t have to be “in charge” to make a difference. “I’ve had young women write letters to their local newspapers holding Senators accountable for votes they did not agree with, and those Senators had to respond to these young women,” she says. Everyone can make a difference by channeling passion and purpose around an important issue.

With maturity and perspective, Gillibrand also now realizes that “ambition is not a dirty word, that it’s okay to aspire to big things...It doesn’t matter what you aspire to. You can do anything you set your mind to,” she advises. “You just have to work hard and believe in yourself. And that’s what ultimately I had to do for myself to be able to run and win.”

I recently sat down with Senator Gillibrand for a candid conversation about the zig-zag path that led her to public service, and the critical life lessons she’s learned in the challenging environment of the United States Senate.

Hi John -

I understand from Mae that you had an eventful week...

Happy belated birthday!

I hope you had a great first week back and are settling into your new role and energized about the year to come.
I look forward to following the administration's progress.

I wish you a speedy recovery from your surgery and hope the doctor's prognosis includes that you'll be back to running in no time.

Hope to see you and Mary in DC in the near future!

Best,
Eric

PS While I thought it would be neat to email you at your white house address I thought better of it and bugged Mae for this one...

It's no secret that the Republican frontrunner in this election has made a name for himself by trafficking in prejudice and paranoia. But Donald Trump's divisive, disturbing suggestion that we stop all Muslims from entering the United States is a new low. Declaring war on Islam or demonizing the Muslim American community is not only counter to our values; it plays right into the hands of terrorists. Muslim Americans are our neighbors, our co-workers, our loved ones, and our friends. Many are working every day all over our country to prevent radicalization. We should be supporting them, not scapegoating them. Radical jihadists, like so many adversaries in our history, underestimate the strength of our national character. America will not cower or cave, and we will not turn on each other or turn on our principles.

This is good. I just want to simplify the stat about who gets substance abuse treatment to the only 1 in 10 get the treatment they need stat. See attached.

Otherwise, policy additions look good. Thanks, Kristina!

If the goal is to name SC, but there's concern about calling out black men specifically, we could revise the sentence to say something like:

"In South Carolina, a lawyer spoke movingly about too many young men who have ended up imprisoned for non-violent drug offenses rather than getting the treatment they needed."

Here's what the lawyer said in the transcript:

"QUESTION: My name is Carlyle Steele and I practice criminal law here in Greenville, and I've been shocked over the last 40 years at the mass incarceration of young men, particularly young African American men. Locking everybody up for minor offenses and nonviolent offenses isn't working out. "

I am hearing separately that even with this change that the screenings could be misconstrued and likely more trouble than they are worth. Let's kill it and I'll revisit it as a good policy idea on the other side of this election but not one for campaign fodder.

Here is my suggestion for four full points:

That's why I'm releasing a comprehensive strategy [LINK] to confront the drug addiction crisis head-on. My plan sets four goals: first, ensuring every American family has access to affordable and effective treatments; second, ensuring that our mental health parity laws are fully enforced so that insurance practices are not a barrier to substance abuse treatment; third, ensuring all first responders have access to naloxone, which stops overdoses from becoming fatal; and fourth, requiring that all health-care providers receive training in recognizing substance use disorders and consult a prescription drug monitoring program before providing opiates.

Does this work for everyone?

Hi all -

Sorry I was out of pocket for a few hours. On a flight now to raise $$ for all of us in Oklahoma - the things we do!!

Anyhow, here is the deal:

(1) The American Academy of Pediatrics came out with a strong policy statement in 2011 that every child/teenager should be screened for substance abuse disorders when they visit the doctor for their annual child check up or for an accute care visit in which it might be suspected. HRC has a long history of working with AAP and supporting their efforts to do more screenings. When she was First Lady, she worked on the Newborn Hearing Screening to make sure all babies get hearing screenings, and in the last several years she has pushed for and supported the AAP's effort to screen young kids for symptoms of "toxic stress." This is not "mandatory," but it is part of prevention and wellness and it is about supporting the AAP in making this happen by raising awareness, making sure pediatricians get reimbursed for their time in doing these screenings, etc. I have tried to clarify with edits to the speech, pasted below and attached.

(2) On Mandy's question about mental health parity, I have added a line.

(3) On Karen's question of whether we reached out to urban leaders, we talked to a number of policy experts who serve urban communities. Maya is going to work with political to be sure we do political outreach to leaders in next 48 hours.

(4) On Karen's suggestion, that she alludes to problems in her own family - I have modified accordingly.

(5) On Nick's question about specialized care, we are good with it as Kristina noted - but let me know if you have further concerns.

I am also attaching our final fact sheet. If all are good, we should get her this draft op-ed together with the fact sheet. Let me know if you have more questions or concerns.

Thanks,

Ann

DRAFT substance abuse op-ed

WC: 822 words

I was on my first trip to New Hampshire this spring, in a Keene bakery, when a retired doctor spoke up. I had just announced I was running for president, and I had traveled to Iowa and New Hampshire to hear directly from voters about their concerns, their hopes, and their vision for the future. He said his biggest worry was the rising tide of heroin addiction in the state, the result of a wave of prescription drug abuse. He said hospitals were seeing more babies born addicted, that police officers were responding to more overdoses, that families were being torn apart.

To be candid, I didn't expect what came next. In several states, this issue crept up again and again – from so many people, from all walks of life, in small towns and big cities.

In Iowa, from Davenport to Council Bluffs, people spoke to me about meth and prescription drugs, and scores of lives upended. In South Carolina, a lawyer spoke movingly about the holes in the community left by generations of black men who ended up imprisoned for non-violent drug offenses rather than getting the treatment they needed.

These stories shine light on some harrowing statistics. Nearly 23 million Americans suffer from addiction, but in 2014, only 2.5 million were able to receive treatment at a specialized facility. Fifty-two million Americans over the age of 12 have abused prescription drugs, including one in four teenagers. In 2014, more Americans died from overdoses than car crashes.

Enough is enough. It's time we recognize as a nation that we have a quiet epidemic on our hands. Plain and simple, drug addiction is a disease, not a moral failing—and we must treat it as such.

It's time we recognize as a nation that there are gaps in our health care system that allow too many sufferers to go without care—and invest substantially more in prevention and treatment.

It's time we recognize as a nation that our state and federal prisons, where 65 percent of inmates meet the medical criteria for substance use disorders, are no substitute for drug treatment—and reform our criminal justice system.

That's why I'm releasing a comprehensive strategy [\[LINK\]](#) to confront the drug addiction crisis head-on. My plan sets four goals: first, ensuring every American family has access to affordable and effective treatments; second, ensuring that we work with pediatricians to be sure that every child and teenager is educated about and screened for substance use disorders as part of their annual doctor's visit, just as we do for hearing, eyesight, developmental delays and so much more; third, ensuring all first responders have access to naloxone, which stops overdoses from becoming fatal; and fourth, requiring that all health-care providers receive training in recognizing substance use disorders and consult a prescription drug monitoring program before providing opiates.

Achieving these goals won't be easy. It's going to take real commitment from all corners—law enforcement, doctors, insurance companies, schools, and governments. That's why my plan starts by increasing funding for the Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Block Grant by 25 percent, so states and localities have more resources to work with, and changing rules that arbitrarily limit how many patients can be treated with medication assisted treatment, a proven intervention for opiate addiction. I will also direct the federal government to re-evaluate Medicare and Medicaid payment practices, to remove obstacles to reimbursement for patients seeking help and promote greater coordination of care. And I will make sure that our mental health parity laws are fully enforced so that insurance practices are not a barrier to substance abuse treatment.

But we can't stop there. As President, I will do everything I can to partner with states and communities across America to meet the four goals—treatment, prevention, overdose intervention, and improved prescriber practices. We'll ask states to design ambitious plans for tackling these four goals using the programs that make most sense for their citizens' needs and challenges. In return for strong plans to address the substance abuse crisis, the federal government will draw on a new $5 billion fund to help states meet their goals.

Every town I've visited so far in this campaign has stories of families upended by drug addiction. But across the country, I've also heard about second chances. The young mother who overcame addictions to alcohol and heroin so her son would never see her with a drink or a drug in her hand. The man who served 11 years in prison who is now serving others through a prison ministry.

They all say the same thing: no matter how much time has passed, no matter how different their lives are today, they're all still in recovery. It's a process—one that began when a family member, a friend, a doctor, a police officer extended a hand to help. As one New Hampshire woman said, "We're not bad people trying to get good, we're sick people who deserve to get well."

There are 23 million Americans suffering from addiction. There are untold millions more. No one is untouched – we all have family and friends who are affected. We can't afford to stay on the sidelines any longer—because when families are strong, America is strong. Through improved treatment, prevention, and training, we can end this quiet epidemic once and for all.

On the screening point, will let policy get into details, but it's the major pillar of the 'prevention' goal. Would folks be more comfortable if it said something like [CAPS=ADDITION] "ensuring every child and teenager is annually screened for substance use DISORDERS, JUST AS THEY ARE ALREADY SCREENED FOR OTHER ILLNESSES"?

schools and doctors regularly screen for all sorts of diseases, and substance abuse screening /= random drug testing.

On the "specialized facilities," the stat comes from the NIH's National Institute on Drug Abuse and includes all facilities licensed or certified by state substance abuse agencies to provide treatment. So think it's easy to answer Politifact when they try to get cute.

Adding John on here.

For the purpose of being authentic to our candidate, I was just thinking to myself what issues I've heard from her repeatedly so we can try to reflect that when she sees the draft. Aside from Carbon, my list would be:

--family leave

--early childhood Ed/development

--raising wages

I think we touched on all three on the call but I wanted to flag them. Others here know her brain better than me so please correct me if I'm wrong. I just want to stay tethered to her motivations, even if that means explaining why these ideas won't work.

We should be encouraging it and I think we will see more manufacturing coming back from China and Mexico for many different reasons.

>> 3: Internet, technology, etc. While we certainly need to encourage this sector this is also where venture capital and angel investors already fill the void. I do see a need for state and federal venture capital funds especially in struggling economies (think Detroit and New Orleans but also among the very young)

>> 4: Infrastructure: America is good at building shit and very good at building roads, bridges, sewer and water systems, airports, ports, etc. And $1 billion in infrastructure spending supports 28,000 jobs. Where else in the economy do we get a return like that. And the multiplier effect is tremendous for the economy. And of course the unions love it.

>> 5: New Energy. Another "all of the above" approach and good return on the number of jobs. Not sure I have a lot to add here.

>> 6: Healthcare: Curious if this should get more attention as our population ages and as cities like Pittsburgh go from a core industry like steel driving their economy to medical driving their economy (and fracking). We have big shortages in health care workers. These are good paying jobs. One idea I had was also to just have the federal gov't come up with the 10% match they are requiring states to pitch in for Medicaid Expansion under Obamacare. This is clearly making winners and losers for working families. If you live in a red state with a GOP governor you are screwed. So just pay for the Medicaid Expansion for states and create literally hundreds of thousands of jobs.

>> 7: for the life of my I had one more and it just flew out of my brain.

>> The following are not sectors but help drive or stunt economic growth:

>> 7: Tax code. Right now it picks the winners and losers and the winners buy all their breaks with lobbyists and lawyers. I would add in this realm onerous regulations.

>> 8: The federal deficit: We know it holds economic growth back and I think we have to talk about fiscal responsibility.

>> 9: Trade. I like your "fair competition" approach. We are also a bit hamstrung given WJC's focus on NAFTA.

>> Anyway, I am just thinking out loud here. You have most of this in your big research book but reading your memo just made me want to type thoughts out.

Dear Professors Leon and Podesta:

I was perusing the list of paper topics that you provided and was intrigued by the last item on the list, about the creation of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission about the War on Terror. I'm interested in exploring this further as a paper topic, but wanted to check to see if this was a topic that someone had already written about or that no one else was planning on writing about it.

Thanks very much!

Sincerely,
Dave Wilkins

Subject: [big campaign] Sons of Iraq Transition Presents Major Challenges

Sons of Iraq Transition Presents Major Challenges

Washington, D.C. - Tomorrow marks a major milestone in Iraq as the Iraqi Government takes responsibility for paying and integrating large numbers of the Sons of Iraq (SOI) - the former Sunni insurgents who began aligning themselves with the U.S. in 2006 and were one of the main reasons for the reduction in violence. There are still significant tension between the Shia dominated central government and the SOIs; and, if the government does not continue to pay these fighters or integrate enough of them into the security forces, it could spell trouble. The SOIs could stop patrolling key areas allowing violence to return, or, even worse, they could return to the insurgency and start actively fighting against the government. While the Bush administration and John McCain may declare victory on this issue tomorrow, it's important to be patient and look for trends of violence in the coming weeks and months to truly measure how this transition is proceeding. Meanwhile, other key political hurdles such as addressing the status of Kirkuk, agreeing on a national oil law, and having free and fair provincial elections, must all be addressed if Iraq is to achieve long-term stability.

Tensions run high as U.S. prepares to hand over responsibility for the Sons of Iraq to the Iraqi Government.

The Sunni members of the Awakening Movement are fearful as they prepare to integrate into the Shia dominated government. Leaders of the SOI speak of the hand over in "apocalyptic terms." "Some have left Baghdad, saying they fear that the Iraqi government will conduct mass arrests after the handover. Others are obtaining passports and say they will flee to Syria." One member of the SOI expressed his fear saying, "They will kill us, One by one." Washington Post, [9/30/08]

Doubts over whether the Shia Government will integrate the Sons of Iraq highlight tenuous security gains. Iraqi government preparations to take over responsibility for the Sunni-dominated Sons of Iraq, highlights dramatic, but tenuous security gains. "Much of Iraq's dramatic security progress can be traced to a series of decisions made by Sunni tribal leaders in late 2006 to turn against Al Qaeda in Iraq and cooperate with American forces in Anbar province." But now, this "key pillar of the U.S. strategy to pacify Iraq is in danger of collapsing," as "[t]he Shiite-dominated government in Iraq is driving out many leaders of Sunni citizen patrols." Equally troubling is the fact "that the government has been slow to make good on its promises to recruit tens of thousands of its members into those security forces." Capt. Parsana Deoki warned: "The big issue that concerns us is what happens if the government drops the ball and stops paying these guys. You'd have up to 400 SOI without jobs, without an income. That presents a problem. They have military training and access to weapons -- unemployed, with weapons, young men with an established chain of command. You can fill in the blanks." Shawn Brimley & Colin Kahl, [8/26/08 . McClatchy, 8/20/08 . NY Times, 8/22/08 . Washington Post, 9/30/08 ]

Handover of Sons of Iraq comes at time when political reconciliation remains uneven, and tensions run high over future of U.S. presence. Iraqi politicians have been unable to translate security improvements into progress on several key issues, including the status of the Sons of Iraq, the oil-law, and the provision of essential services by the Iraqi government. On Monday, General Odierno laid out the implications of inaction, saying: ""They're working toward this, but if they don't do this, the citizens over time will potentially start to move against the government." Even the touted passage of a provincial elections law "came with some major hurdles attached, at least one of which was described as a 'very dark' cloud by the United Nations' special representative, Staffan de Mistura. That issue involves the northern city of Kirkuk, which Kurdish leaders want as part of the semiautonomous Kurdistan region." The lack of political progress comes at an especially sensitive time, as the U.S. prepares to hand over broader control to the Iraqi Government in the form of a security agreement, as indicated in yesterday's statements by Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki. Despite John McCain's statement in August that victory in Iraq "is finally in sight," the situation in Iraq remains precarious. NSN, [8/21/08. Time, 8/16/08 . USA Today, 9/30/08 . John,

Have your tickets yet? One table remains.

Our guest John Miller is the Deputy Commissioner of Intelligence of the NYPD. He is the former Associate Deputy Director of National Intelligence for Analytic Transformation and Technology.

Prior to that, he was an Assistant Director of Public Affairs for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), where he was the bureau's national spokesman.

Miller is also a former ABC News reporter and anchorman, perhaps best known for conducting a May 1998 interview with Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GW8\_Zbsirdw).

John Miller was named a senior correspondent for CBS News on Oct. 17, 2011. In this capacity, Miller reported for all CBS News platforms and broadcasts, including "CBS This Morning" and occasionally for "60 Minutes."

I hope you will join us.

Subject: We need you -- the stakes are high

We're pleased to announce that Senator Patty Murray will be joining Senator Harry Reid as a featured speaker at the Countdown to Election Day Reception. But we need your support to ensure big wins for the environment on Election Day. Sign up now to be a Host for the Countdown to Election Day Reception.

-Gene

Dear John,

With the 2012 elections less than one hundred days away, summer is heating up and so are the year's most high-stakes political campaigns. You and I both know that Big Oil and their cronies in Congress have deep pockets, and use shameless tactics. But day after day, month after month, the League of Conservation Voters Victory Fund fights back. Our top-notch team of political experts and our seasoned campaign team are on the ground in key battleground states helping our environmental champions win. None of that would be possible without the ongoing support of dedicated supporters like you.

At this critical time, I hope you will lend your support to LCV Victory Fund's efforts by joining the Host Committee for the Countdown to Election Day Reception on Wednesday, September 19, 2012 in Washington, DC. As a member of the Host Committee, we ask you to give or raise $500 to help support LCV Victory Fund's important efforts to elect environmental champions to Congress. Click here to make a contribution online.

The Countdown to Election Day Reception will be from 6:00 to 8:00 p.m. at the Stewart R. Mott House, 122 Maryland Avenue, NE, Washington, DC. Even if you have a conflict that evening, we still hope you will join the Host Committee and share the event with your friends and colleagues. The reception is always a great opportunity to network with many leading environmental champions in Congress and meet new friends.

The egregious attacks on environmental protections in the House have made it obvious how essential it is that we protect the pro-environment majority in the Senate. So many races will have major implications for the environment, public health, and global warming policy. In an election season that promises to be the most expensive ever, your support of LCV Victory Fund is a smart, effective way to make a major impact.

To confirm your participation as a member of the Countdown to Election Day Reception Host Committee, please register online by August 17, 2012 or contact Jenna Ebert at Jenna\_Ebert@lcv.org or by phone at (202) 454-4583. Once we confirm you as a host we will send you an invitation to share with your networks.

Thank you for all you do for the environment and for helping us prove to leaders that good environmental policy is still smart politics. We couldn't do what we do without your support.

I look forward to seeing you on September 19th!

Best regards,

Gene Karpinski
President

Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech to La Raza San Diego, CA 07/14/08

Hello All,

Just off the phone with our tracker Jacob who is on the ground today in San Diego, CA. Below are the notes from our call.

BIG HIGHLIGHTS:

- McCain interrupted by demonstrators at beginning of speech
- McCain sites the relationships with Central and South America as the "reason why I'm an unapologetic supporter of NAFTA, the Central American Free Trade Agreement, and the Colombian Free Trade Agreement"
- On education, McCain said, "I'm a big supporter of charter schools and so is La Raza."
- McCain emphasized the "tragic human costs of illegal immigration" and called these people "God's Children"
- McCain highlighted that he represents a border state and knows first hand the troubles associated with the borders and illegal immigration
- McCain denounced hurtful comments: "I know many of you were disappointed and hurt by those who used the debate on immigration last year, not to respectfully debate the issue, as most did, but to denigrate the contributions of Hispanics to our great country. I denounced those insults then, and I denounce them today"
- During the question and answer period, McCain committed to 'one, single comprehensive bill' for immigration reform that includes dealing with the millions of illegals currently in the country
- In response to a question, McCain said "yes" he will lead his party and instruct fellow Republicans to stop immigrant-bashing
- McCain emphasized in his speech and the Q&A that we need to secure the borders first

[Interrupted by demonstrators]

Thank you, Jane, for that kind introduction. Thank you, also to the leadership of the National Council of La Raza, and its board of directors. I'm very pleased to be with you again to discuss some of the issues in this campaign that most concern you. As you know, this isn't my first address to La Raza. I'm proud to have worked hard over the years with many friends here and elsewhere to make sure Americans of Hispanic heritage are appreciated for their contributions to the prosperity, security and culture of the United States, and to improve opportunities for your continued success, not for your sake alone but for the benefit of the entire nation. I also want to thank La Raza's former CEO, Raul Yzaguirre, for being here today, and for the privilege of over twenty years of friendship and counsel he has so generously given me. And to my fellow Arizonans here today, who have given me the great honor of serving you in the United States Senate, thank you from the bottom of my heart. With your votes, advice and encouragement you have helped me to be a better public servant and a better American, and I am in your debt.

There are several issues I want to discuss today, but let me begin with the one that concerns all Americans the most – our economy. Over 400,000 people have lost their jobs since December, and the rate of new job creation has fallen sharply. Americans are worried about the security of their current job, and they're worried that they, their kids and their neighbors may not find good jobs and new opportunities in the future. To make matters worse, gas is over $4 a gallon and the price of oil has nearly doubled in the last year. The cost of everything from energy to food is rising.

I have a plan to grow the economy, create more and better jobs, and get America moving again. I have a plan to reform government, achieve energy security, and ensure that healthcare and a quality education are affordable and available for all. I believe the role of government is to unleash the creativity, ingenuity and hard work of the American people, and make it easier to create jobs.

At its core, the economy isn't the sum of an array of bewildering statistics. It's about where Americans work, how they live, how they pay their bills today and save for tomorrow. It's about small businesses opening their doors, hiring employees and growing. It's about giving workers the education and training to find a good job and prosper in it. It's about the aspirations of the American people to build a better life for their families; dreams that begin with a job.

So how are we going to create good jobs? Let's start with small businesses, which create the majority of all jobs. A recent report says small businesses have created 233,000 jobs so far this year while other sectors are losing jobs. Small businesses are the job engine of America, and I will make it easier for them to grow and create more jobs. There are two million Latino owned businesses in America, many of them started by Latinas. The first consideration we should have when debating tax policy is how we can help those companies grow and increase the prosperity of the millions of American families whose economic security depends on their success.

It is a terrible mistake to raise taxes during an economic downturn. Increasing the tax burden on Americans impedes job growth, discourages innovation and makes us less competitive. The many small business owners who pay individual tax rates would take strong exception to the idea that keeping them low helps no one but the wealthiest Americans. Taking more money from small businesses deprives them of the capital they need to invest and grow and hire. Jobs are the most important thing our economy creates. When you raise taxes in a bad economy you eliminate jobs. I'm not going to let that happen, I will keep taxes low and cut them where I can. For those of you with children, I will double the child deduction from $3500 to $7000 for every dependent, in every family in America. I will reduce the estate tax to fifteen percent, so parents who have spent long years working hard to build a business, and provide a decent living to their employees, can leave the product of a lifetime of labor and love to their children.

La Raza runs one of the largest housing counseling programs in the country that has helped tens of thousands of Latinos become homeowners with secure mortgages. But millions of Americans have been hurt by the mortgage crisis and falling home values, and many in the Hispanic community have been especially hard hit. I want to help people who genuinely need assistance in these tough times, not speculators and lenders who contributed to this mess and didn't follow the basics of good business practice. I am committed to making sure families who want to hold onto their home have a chance to do so. My HOME plan allows families who need help to apply — either at their local Post Office or online — for a new, guaranteed, fixed-rate, 30-year mortgage that will allow them to remain in their home, and raise their family with dignity.

To get our economy on track again, and create new and better jobs, we need to compete more, not less, in the global economy. We can't build walls to foreign competition, and we shouldn't want to. America is the biggest exporter, importer, producer, manufacturer, and innovator in the world. That's why I reject the false virtues of economic isolationism. Any confident, competent country and its government should embrace competition - it makes us stronger - not hide from our competitors and cheat our consumers and workers. We can compete and win, as we always have, or we can be left behind. Lowering barriers to trade creates more and better jobs, and higher wages. It keeps inflation under control. It makes goods more affordable for low- and middle-income consumers. Ninety-five percent of the world's consumers live outside the U.S. Our future prosperity depends on opening more of these markets, not closing them.

I recently traveled to Colombia and Mexico [APPLAUSE] because I understand how vitally important it is to the prosperity and security of our country to strengthen our trade, investment and diplomatic ties to other countries in our hemisphere. I have often traveled over the years to Central and South America, and I have learned our relationships there are as important, if not more important, as any relationships we have in the world. It is the reason why I'm an unapologetic supporter of NAFTA, the Central American Free Trade Agreement, and the Colombian Free Trade Agreement, and why I believe a hemispheric free trade agreement is a worthy and necessary goal whose time has come. And while it is surely not my intention to become my opponent's scheduler, I hope Senator Obama soon visits some of the other countries of the Americas for the first time. Were he to do so, I think he, too, would see that stronger economic bonds with our neighbors and the closer friendships they encourage, are a great benefit in many ways to our country. Colombian President Uribe, a man of courage and vision, has risked much to combat the narco-terrorists of FARC for the sake of all peoples in this hemisphere. His recent leadership in freeing Americans held hostage for years should earn him the respect and gratitude of all Americans. And we should emulate his statesmanship by passing the trade agreement Colombia and the United States have negotiated, and which both countries would greatly benefit from.

I know that not all Americans have prospered in the global economy. And for those who, through no fault of their own, have lost their job to foreign competition, I have proposed a comprehensive reform of our unemployment insurance and worker retraining programs. We will use our community colleges to help train workers for specific opportunities in their communities. And for workers of a certain age who have lost a job that won't come back, if they move rapidly to a new job we'll help make up the difference in wages between their old job and the new one.

In the global economy what you learn is what you earn. Today, studies show that half of Hispanics entering high school do not graduate with their class. By the 12th grade, U.S. students in math and science score near the bottom of all industrialized nations. Many parents fear their children won't have the same opportunities they had. That is unacceptable in a country as great as ours. In many schools, particularly where people are struggling the hardest, the situation is dire, and I believe poses the civil rights challenge of our time. We need to shake up failed school bureaucracies with competition; hold schools accountable for results; strengthen math, science, technology and engineering curriculums; empower parents with choice; remove barriers to qualified instructors, attract and reward superior teachers, and have a fair but sure process to weed out incompetents. I'm a strong believer in charter schools [and so is La Raza]. La Raza has helped establish 50 new charter schools and the results they are producing are very encouraging. Hispanics work hard and sacrifice a lot because their most cherished dreams are the ones they hold for their children. You understand the importance of early childhood development and the active role parents must play in their children's education to make sure they graduate on time and with an excellent opportunity to live happy and prosperous lives. You deserve a greater say in deciding how your children are educated, and I am committed to making sure you do.

Let me address one other issue important to all of us. As you know, I and many other colleagues twice attempted to pass comprehensive immigration legislation to fix our broken borders; ensure respect for the laws of this country; recognize the important economic contribution of immigrant laborers; apprehend those who came here illegally to commit crimes; and deal practically and humanely with those who came here, as my distant ancestors did, to build a better, safer life for their families, without excusing the fact they came here illegally or granting them privileges before those who have been waiting their turn outside the country. Many Americans did not believe us when we said we would secure our borders, and so we failed in our efforts. I don't want to fail again to achieve comprehensive immigration reform. We must prove we have the resources to secure our borders and use them, while respecting the dignity and rights of citizens and legal residents of the United States. When we have achieved our border security goal, we must enact and implement the other parts of practical, fair and necessary immigration policy. We have economic and humanitarian responsibilities as well, and they require no less dedication from us in meeting them.

Several years ago, the leading newspaper in my state published an article putting faces on the tragic human costs of illegal immigration, and I would like to briefly quote from it:

"Maria Hernandez Perez was No. 93. She was almost 2. She had thick brown hair and eyes the color of chocolate.

"Kelia Velazquez-Gonzales, 16, carried a Bible in her backpack. She was No. 109

"John Doe, No. 143, died with a rosary encircling his neck. His eyes were wide open."

We can't let immigrants break our laws with impunity. We can't leave our borders undefended. But these people are God's children, who wanted simply to be Americans, and we cannot forget the humanity God commands of us as we seek a remedy to this problem.

I spoke recently at both the NALEO and LULAC conferences, as did Senator Obama. I did not use those occasions to criticize Senator Obama. I would prefer not to do so today. But he suggested in his speeches there and here, that I turned my back on comprehensive reform out of political necessity. I feel I must, as they say, correct the record. At a moment of great difficulty in my campaign, when my critics said it would be political suicide for me to do so, I helped author with Senator Kennedy comprehensive immigration reform, and fought for its passage. I cast a lot of hard votes, as did the other Republicans and Democrats who joined our bipartisan effort. So did Senator Kennedy. I took my lumps for it without complaint. My campaign was written off as a lost cause. I did so not just because I believed it was the right thing to do for Hispanic Americans. It was the right thing to do for all Americans. Senator Obama declined to cast some of those tough votes. He voted for and even sponsored amendments that were intended to kill the legislation, amendments that Senator Kennedy and I voted against. I never ask for any special privileges from anyone just for having done the right thing. Doing my duty to my country is its own reward. But I do ask for your trust that when I say, I remain committed to fair, practical and comprehensive immigration reform, I mean it. I think I have earned that trust.

Let me close by expressing my respect and gratitude for the contributions of Hispanic-Americans to the culture, economy and security of the country I have served all my adult life. I represent Arizona where Spanish was spoken before English was, and where the character and prosperity of our state owes a great deal to the many Arizonans of Hispanic descent who live there. And I know this country, which I love more than almost anything, would be the poorer were we deprived of the patriotism, industry and decency of those millions of Americans whose families came here from other countries in our hemisphere. Latinos are among the hardest working most productive people in our country. The strength of your religious faith and the strength and closeness of your families are a great force for social stability and individual happiness. In my recent visit to Mexico, I visited the Shrine of the Virgin of Guadalupe, and was greatly moved by the experience, and came to appreciate all the more your deep devotion to the God who created us and loves us all equally. I will honor your contributions to America for as long as I live. We would not be the special country we are without you.

I know many of you are Democrats, and many of you would usually vote for the presidential candidate of that party. I know I must work hard to win your votes, but you have always given me a respectful hearing, and I appreciate it. I know many of you were disappointed and hurt by those who used the debate on immigration last year, not to respectfully debate the issue, as most did, but to denigrate the contributions of Hispanics to our great country. I denounced those insults then, and I denounce them today. My friends, you know me. One of my proudest achievements as a politician is to have won 75 percent of the Hispanic vote in Arizona in my last re-election. I believe I'm the only member of the Senate to have twice won your Congressional Leadership Award, a distinction I am also very proud of. Senator Obama is a fine man, and an inspiring public figure. All Americans should be proud of his success. I also greatly admire Senator Hillary Clinton, and value her friendship. She, too, would have been a very worthy opponent. But I intend to compete for your votes by continuing to earn your trust.

When I was in prison in Vietnam, I like other of my fellow POWs, was offered early release by my captors. Most of us refused because we were bound to our code of conduct, which said those who had been captured the earliest had to be released the soonest. My friend, Everett Alvarez, a brave American of Mexican descent, had been shot down years before I was, and had suffered for his country much more and much longer than I had. To leave him behind would have shamed us. When you take the solemn stroll along that wall of black granite on the national Mall, it is hard not to notice the many names such as Rodriguez, Hernandez, and Lopez that so sadly adorn it. When you visit Iraq and Afghanistan you will meet some of the thousands of Hispanic-Americans who serve there, and many of those who risk their lives to protect the rest of us do not yet possess the rights and privileges of full citizenship in the country they love so well. To love your country, as I discovered in Vietnam, is to love your countrymen. Those men and women are my brothers and sisters, my fellow Americans, an association that means more to me than any other. As a private citizen or as your President, I will never, never do anything to dishonor our obligations to them and their families or to forget what they and their ancestors have done to make this country the beautiful, bountiful, blessed place we love.

Thank you.

Questions and Answers

1 Q) Will you have immigration reform so that the millions of undocumented immigrants are included in one bill and will you do what Obama has promised to do and make this a top priority?

MCCAIN: I thank your father for this service. If I didn't think this was a priority, I would not have alienated my party to take the positions I have. I think my actions speak for themselves. My friends why did we fail twice? Because many Americans remembered that in 1986 we gave amnesty for a lot of people and then didn't secure our borders. Now, the American people don't trust us. You can have confidence it was my highest priority a couple years ago, it's a top priority now and will be a top priority tomorrow.

FOLLOW-UP: The answer is one single bill. Will you make sure it's one single bill?

MCCAIN: Yes, Yes, Yes! One single, comprehensive bill. But we have to assure to the American people that we'll secure the borders first.

2 Q) I am ashamed of these raids that are separating children from their parents from one day to the next. As president, will you stop making me ashamed and stop making these inhumane raids?

MCCAIN: You are talking about the symptom of the problem and not the problem itself. Anyone who comes from a border state like myself and has seen the terrible things that happen, I know it's a failure of the system. I will do everything I can so that this issue is treated in as a humane and compassionate way as possible. We have to protect all of God's children.

FOLLOW-UP: Many are U.S. citizens -- but they are not treated in the same way.

MCCAIN: I agree with you. Last 4th of July, I was with Lindsay Graham in Iraq and experienced something similar. But yes, I agree with you.

3 Q) Will you refrain from immigrant bashing?

MCCAIN: Yes, ma'am. I will not do that.

FOLLOW-UP: I know you have committed to do this. But your party has not. Will you as the leader of your party instruct your members to stop hate-bashing immigrants?

MCCAIN: Yes. I want a respectful campaign. The American people are tired of this fighting. I asked Obama to be here, so he could make the same commitment to you when I did. But he has said no to being part of joint town halls.

4 Q) Will you support humanity all-around the world and will you support humanity, including the Dream Act?

MCCAIN: Yes. But I will also support our laws. And we have to secure our borders and reward those who have followed the rules and have been waiting for citizenship already.

5 Q) People who are crossing do not have any legal means for crossing -- your parents got to come without any legal process. Everyone was welcome at Ellis Island. We want comprehensive immigration reform. We want people to be able to come into this country legally.

MCCAIN: I understand your issues, I come from a border state. But drugs are coming across the borders as well and killing Americans. We have to secure our borders first. I want to do this in a humane way, but we have to secure our borders.

Looks pretty good. Will Raj Chetty sign on?

John,

Following up from our discussion this morning. Here is a list of Econ advisors that we could announce around the time we launch the working group structure.

10/18/2016

Neera Tanden, Gene Sperling, Jacob Hacker, Eduardo Padron, Teresa Ghilarducci, Alan Krueger, Alan Blinder, Byron Auguste, Christina Romer, Gary Gensler, Laura Tyson, Austan Goolsbee, and Heather Boushey.

What do you think of this list/approach?

Aside from the Econ question and the couple of suggestions you provided me, are you good with the rest of the list that you viewed this morning so we can start reaching out?

Thanks,

Ed

John,

Attached is the proposed list of leadership for the policy working groups for your review. You can click on each name and it will take you straight to the person's bio on the internet.

Each policy group will be managed by a Coordinator (or co-coordinators) who will lead the operations of the group and serve as the primary liaison with the policy team. Additionally we will have 2-4 Senior Partners per group who are high level notable policy leaders in their field. The Senior Partners will join the monthly calls and work with the coordinators to provide overall strategic direction for the group.

We have held off on reaching out to most of the Domestic and Econ leaders until you review and provide feedback. Please let us know if there are particular groups that you would like to weigh in on specifically. We have started discussions with many of the Foreign Policy group leaders and have received positive responses.

Next Steps:

1. You review the list and flag any questions, concerns, or recommendations.

- Policy will circulate the list to senior staff leadership for a quick review for any major political red flags (All the proposed Coordinators and Senior Partners have been vetted or are currently being vetted).
- Policy will send a brief memo to Secretary Clinton outlining the working group process and attach the leadership list.
- Start launching the groups as early as next week.

Thank you,

Ed

Dear Jake,

There is an excellent piece in today's (October 8) Washington Post by Danielle Paquette, "Rising in Japan's Workforce: Women, A8) which describes the pro-female/family policy on paid maternity leave and paternity leave in Japan, day care, etc. and the dramatic impact it has had in just a few years on female employment and income. By comparison, 43 million American workers have no paid leave. Hillary may have already spoken to this issue, but it would a great pro-family, pro-female issue to highlight in the debate.

Let me know if there are any way I can help by reviewing q's and a's on Iran, Israel, Syria, etc.

6.15.15 (1).xlsx

Hi everyone-Attached is the daily labor outreach update. In column F I have noted "Update" if there is one to note. The big news is the IAFF endorsement! Very exciting.

Trade: Positive feedback received from the Secretary's Iowa comments aligning herself with Pelosi. I've heard little negative feedback. This was a helpful development for labor outreach.

Special requests:

SEIU: They are working toward a September/October endorsement timeframe. They still have process to move. Mary Kay is in Brazil right now, but when she returns a outreach call by John would be helpful. I will circulate her return date as soon as I have it. Please see spreadsheet for additional notes.

AFSCME: I'd like to request a call by John to Lee post candidate screening. just to touchbase on where the board is and next steps. I know they have internal process they are moving but clarity around any next steps we can do would be helpful.

Thank you all!

Georgetown Law hosts "Cybercrime 2020: The Future of Online Crime and Investigations" on Thursday, December 4, 2014, from 8:30 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on the 12th floor of the Gewirz Student Center, located on the Georgetown Law campus at 120 F Street, NW, Washington, D.C.

The participants will look at where technology is taking us, how it is likely to be exploited in the near future and what law enforcement can and should be doing to address such threats while balancing privacy and civil liberties. They will consider how investigative techniques may be shaped in light of evolving Fourth Amendment jurisprudence. They will also explore how the federal courts may respond to advances in technology and what legislation may be needed to address the challenges ahead.

This event is sponsored by Georgetown Law and the Criminal Division of the U.S. Department of Justice.

Subject: Debate Book Update

This is what I think we should do based on tonight's sessions:

1. How to pay for it – replace p. 26 ONLY -- w removal of carbon tax, and edits agreed to tonight
2. Wall Street – DO NOT change pages, edits minor and she took notes
3. Health Care – replace p. 56 ONLY w update on Colorado answer
4. Gun Violence – replace entire section pp 106-111 – add new attacks from strategy memo; add answer on gun registry
5. ISIS: pull existing pages 130-137 and replace with new pages, updated with “new” HRC plan to fight ISIS abroad and at home, and with post-SanB frame. This is the most important update.
6. Islamic Terrorism: replace page 141 with update
7. Terrorism – Safer today?: replace p. 142 w update
8. Refugees – replace page 143 w pivot to action on visa waiver program

Let me know if I am missing something or if others took away a different understanding.

Ron

Subject: Seminar Paper Topic

Good morning Professors,

I've chosen "Roles & Challenges of Private Counsel in Congressional Investigations: Navigating Waters, Assessing Risks, and Prepping Witnesses" as a topic.

I chose this because I've always been intrigued by the regionally unique congressional investigations bar we have in DC. With most prominent DC law firms showcasing congressional investigations practice groups on their websites, I'd like to write about this niche practice and assess the challenges facing counsel in this realm. I'm particularly interested in learning what role lawyers play in congressional investigations and how their representation may differ from more traditional court room settings.

Some early questions I plan to pursue:

- What is considered a victory for the client?
- What role does counsel assume? Advocate? Advisor? Coach?
- How does witness preparation for a hearing compare to client preparation for trial testimony, or depositions?
- What interplay or conflicts may exist with a law firm's lobbying activities?
- How does a lawyer wear the hat of public relations manager when dealing with client media exposure?

I plan to research past investigations and also hope to interview attorneys in this area to get a better understanding of what challenges they see facing this practice of law.

I'm looking forward to getting started and to hearing your thoughts on the topic.

Best,

Phil Beshara

Subject: Fwd: CLIP | LA TIMES: Clinton comes alive with Latino audience in Texas

This enthusiastic write-up gets at why I think it's important to let her have a prompter on a reasonably regular basis in a rally setting. She hit all her lines and they worked in a way that doesn't always happen when she's just up there riffing.

LA TIMES

October 15, 2015

Hillary Rodham Clinton demonstrated Thursday one of the biggest reasons she will be exceedingly difficult for any of her Democratic rivals to overtake: Latino voters.

Parachuting into San Antonio to pick up an endorsement from Housing and Urban Development Secretary Julian Castro, who is often mentioned as a possible running mate, Clinton rallied supporters and went deep on policy in a session with the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. During the short visit, she put on full display how deep and durable are her ties with one of the most important voting blocs in the nominating contest.

Along the way, a candidate who often struggles to connect demonstrated how much more alive she can seem with a Latino crowd.

"I love being 'La Hillary,'" she told her enthusiastic supporters here, in reference to the affectionate nickname some of her backers use. "I want you to know I am not just La Hillary, I am also Tu Hillary" -- your Hillary.

The crowd roared with appreciation as Clinton recounted hours she spent walking the streets of San Antonio as a volunteer four decades ago in the 1972 election, registering voters with the bushy-haired boyfriend who would go on to become her husband and eventually the president.

"I was a blond girl from Chicago," she said. "But I drove around south Texas and the valley. People welcomed me into their homes. I sat at a lot of kitchen tables. I drank a lot of strong coffee. I listened as people shared their worries, their stories, their dreams."

Democrats are unlikely to make a serious challenge in Texas -- a state that has voted for Republicans in every presidential election since 1980. But Latino voters will be key to the outcome in several states that will be hotly contested, including Nevada, Colorado and Florida.

Latinos could be even more important in the outcome of the primaries. As a group, they voted heavily for Clinton when she ran for the nomination in 2008, and so far she has maintained a large lead among them this time around.

Addressing the crowd here, Clinton strung together a narrative from a repertoire of anecdotes familiar to those who follow her as she campaigns. In some appearances, those tales fall flat, here, she showed how effective they can be.

Almost everything Clinton said, she hooked to the experience of immigrants and their children. During the session with the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, she charged that the rhetoric of the Republican candidates, which she characterized as anti-immigrant, is dangerous.

"We have to ask ourselves hard questions about how ... some of the really harsh inflammatory language coming from Republican candidates about Hispanics has just added to the ongoing problem we face," she said.

"Condemning people with this type of rhetoric" makes people feel "free to not only speak in pejorative terms, but even act in a way that is prejudiced and hurtful," Clinton said.

At the rally later in the day, she recalled the language Donald Trump has used to talk about Mexican immigrants and repeated a line she has used before: "Basta!" -- Spanish for "enough."

The crowd had probably heard Clinton use the line before. Still, it went wild.

After Clinton's strong performance, a Biden bid looks more debatable

"For me," Clinton said, "this is personal."

She joked about the mango ice cream she had consumed hanging out with immigrant families in Texas, she recounted how touched she had been to see immigrant children jumping into the arms of their farmworker parents when she babysat for them as a teenage volunteer, she put immigration reform in more human language than her opponents have managed.

Emilia Flores, a 70-year-old nurse, said she had tuned out Clinton before the rally, sick of hearing about the controversies involving her emails and the Clinton Foundation and everything else.

After Thursday, however, she said she had made up her mind to vote for Clinton.

"She sounded like she personally is feeling for us," Flores said. "She's got the knowledge of what we go through."

Armando Gonzalez, a 65-year-old retired carpenter, said of Clinton's recollections: "You never hear that.... It gets you kind of teary. It is true. As migrants, we are treated like second-class citizens."

Gonzalez, whose parents were Mexican immigrants, said Clinton's forceful speech on behalf of immigrants reminded him of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. And in talking about his own experience, he put in a nutshell why making those connections are so crucial to the outcome of the election.

"My parents were immigrants who couldn't vote," he said. "But now I can, and now my kids can vote. And we've got all these votes, and they are all going Democrat."

Hello Hillary,

As you put your team together, in my view the two best Colorado political consultants are Mike Melansen and Alan Salazar. They both were architects of Governor Hickenlooper's recent win, and have huge experience in U.S. Senate and Governor's races, as well as supporting roles in Presidential ones.

Also, you should meet Al Yates-African American, PhD in theoretical physics, former President of Colorado State University, founder of the Democracy Alliance, and ....the list goes on. He singlehandedly has in his head the data analytics of the last ten years in Colorado (funded with huge resources) including the explanation of why Mark Udall lost and John Hickenlooper won. I always won Colorado because of him. I would like to arrange a time with him and you/ and your team as we get started.

I know there are many good people in Colorado who would want to help, will help, and are seeking roles or have had roles with you or the President in the past. The three I mention above have no agenda, are smart, humble and effective. In my view, the team you put together in Colorado will be the keystone of your victory here. So please be cautious and on target. I am available to you or your team whenever you want.

All the best,

Ken Salazar

My dear friend and colleague Hilary,

I so enjoyed our meeting today. I am all in because I know you, believe in you, and share your values.

I will help you as much as I can. Specifically, I would offer to (1) host your first fundraiser in Colorado at Hope's and my home (my Mom might even make it if she can); (2) help identify the key elected leaders in Colorado like Representative Crisanta Duran and Mayor Hancock of Denver and host a meeting with you and them; (3) help identify the right political talent in Colorado; and (4) help as needed across the nation.

You are the best. Cesar Chavez prayed "give me the courage to serve others because in service there is true life." You have done so in your words and deeds and I look forward to your next chapter of service.

All the best,

Ken Salazar

An Estate Planner's Guide to Family Business Entities: Family Limited Partnerships, Limited Liability Companies, and More, Third Edition

Author: Louis A Mezzullo

As the nation's population ages, an increasing number of clients are looking for the most effective way to pass their investments on to younger family members. This updated edition of An Estate Planner's Guide to Family Business Entities provides a complete and timely framework for selecting the most appropriate means of transferring wealth through the establishment of a business entity, including S corporations, C corporations, partnerships and LLCs. As with the other books in Louis A. Mezzullo's popular series, An Estate Planner's Guide to Family Business Entities explains complex information in a logical, user-friendly style. Updated to reflect recent significant changes in the area, it gives lawyers and financial planners the necessary background to accurately advise clients on their choice of entity options. Mezzullo discusses the different techniques available for most effectively planning the transfer of a client's wealth, including trusts, S corporations, C corporations, partnerships and LLCs. To guide the selection of the most appropriate entity to meet a client's objectives, he offers a thorough comparison of the advantages, disadvantages and restrictions of each type of entity. The book begins with a concise explanation of the objectives and techniques of estate planning for owners of closely held businesses. Subsequent chapters provide a practical guide to the variety of forms of legal business entities available to help clients minimize estate and gift taxes while also realizing a number of non-tax benefits.

All,

As discussed on the call on Monday, we will be having the funding call every Monday at 5:30pm EST from now until the election.

I will send out a reminder and dial in number on Monday.

If you are helping to get some information for the funding chart, please have it to me by Friday COB. I would like to be able to combine it into one workbook so that we can all have it for Monday's call.

As a reminder, AV is working on c4 & c3 field funding in the 7 states (includes the Youth sets), David and John are working on media funding opportunities.

Please let me know if you need anything.

New Ad Campaign: Health Care Reform Must Include Choice of a Public Health Insurance Plan

Ad to Run In Home States of Chair and Ranking Republican of Senate Finance Committee

Follows a 10,000 Person Online Town Hall Meeting Monday Night with Dr. Howard Dean and MoveOn.org Political Action

A new 30 second television ad, running in Iowa, Montana and Washington, DC, uses humor to highlight the importance of including the choice of a public health insurance plan in any health care reform legislation. The ad, by MoveOn.org Civic Action, follows an online town hall meeting on the subject Monday night that over 10,000 people participated in – the highest attendance ever recorded by sister organization Moveon.org Political Action for an issue briefing. The ads will run in the home states of the chair and the ranking Republican of the Senate Finance Committee, as well as in Washington, DC, for one week. The public health insurance option has been vigorously opposed by the insurance industry and their allies in Congress.

Senator Max Baucus (D-MT) has recently shown a willingness to support the public health insurance option, while Senator Chuck Grassley (R-IA) remains dead set against it, despite the fact that a recent poll showed that 56% of Iowans want a public health insurance option.<sup>[1]</sup> The Iowa results mirror polls that show most Americans believe the choice of a public health insurance plan is key to solving our health care crisis.

The television ad, set in a funeral home, uses humor and shows two funeral directors discussing how President Obama's health care reform proposal, with its inclusion of the choice of a public health insurance plan, will lower people’s health care costs and let them live longer, therefore putting the funeral directors out of business.

“While our ad uses humor to elevate the importance of the public health insurance option, the point couldn't be more serious,” said Justin Ruben, Executive Director of MoveOn. “Senators Baucus and Grassley are at the center of the fight for real health care reform. They have a responsibility to stand with the overwhelming majority of Americans who want the choice of a public health insurance plan – but instead, Senator Grassley and Congressional Republicans have been standing with the insurance companies and special interests.”

The ad campaign follows Monday night’s online town hall meeting on the subject. The town hall was hosted jointly by MoveOn.org Political Action and Democracy for America. The town hall, which over 20,000 people attended, was featured Governor Howard Dean explaining the public health insurance option and taking questions from the on line crowd.

You can hear the town hall at: <http://pol.moveon.org/deanforum/recording.html>

| UNDERTAKER #1: If Obama’s public health insurance option passes, it will be a disaster for us.UNDERTAKER #2: It will be terrible.         | Obama’s health care proposal currently includes the choice of a public health insurance plan. His proposal includes a provision to “Establish a National Health Insurance Exchange with a range of private insurance options as well as a new public plan based on benefits available to members of Congress that will allow individuals and small businesses to buy affordable health coverage.” http://www.whitehouse.gov/agenda/health_care/                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| UNDERTAKER #1: I know, right? A cheap, affordable plan like that? It’s just gonna force insurance companies to lower their rates, to compete. | A public health insurance option forces private companies to compete, ultimately reducing costs for consumers. See for example the Urban Institute’s study “Can a Public Health Plan Increase Competition and Lower the Costs of Health Reform?,” 10/3/08, available at http://www.urban.org/publications/411762.html .An expanded public plan would have improved bargaining power, allowing it to reduce costs without reducing quality. When costs to consumers do rise, the increase would be smaller than that of private plans. This lowers costs for the consumer, forcing private plans to compete by cutting their own profits. [See “The Case for Public Plan Choice in National Health Reform,” by Jacob S. Hacker, PhD, published by Berkeley School of Law and the Institute for America’s Future, http://institute.ourfuture.org/files/Jacob_Hacker_Public_Plan_Choice.pdf , and “Cost Impact Analysis for the ‘Health Care for America’ Proposal,” Lewin Group, February 2008, http://www.sharedprosperity.org/hcfa/lewin.pdf .] |

UNDERTAKER #2: A public health care plan means affordable health care for everyone. And you know what that means.

Jacob Hacker summarized what a public health insurance option would mean for premiums and costs in a Q&A with the American Prospect's Ezra Klein: "The public health insurance plan's premiums would be about 23 percent lower than comparable private insurance for the same set of benefits for the same population. These savings are principally due to the two unique features of a public plan: its simplified administrative structure, and its ability to bargain for better rates." Prospect.org, March 3, 2009, [http://www.prospect.org/csnc/blogs/ezraklein\_archive?month=03&year=2009&base\_name=jacob\_hacker\_respondsto\_you]

High costs are the key factor in keeping the uninsured from purchasing insurance and keeping the insured from accessing needed services. Nearly 40% of US adults overall report skipping key medical services because of cost. "Affordability Commonwealth Fund Biennial Health Insurance Survey found that of 58 million adults under age 65 who sought coverage in the individual insurance market over a three year period, nine of 10 did not purchase coverage ....More than half of the underinsured (53%) and two-thirds of the uninsured (68%) went without needed care including not seeing a doctor when sick, not filling prescriptions, and not following up on recommended tests or treatment. Only 31 percent of adequately insured adults went without such care....Almost 40 percent of U.S. adults report one of three access problems because of costs: not getting needed care because of cost of a doctor's visit, skipping medical test, treatment, or follow-up because of costs, or not filling prescription or skipping doses because of cost." ["Public Programs: Critical Building Blocks in Health Reform," Testimony of Karen Davis, President of the Commonwealth Fund, before the Senate Finance Committee, June 16, 2008, available at <http://finance.senate.gov/healthsummit2008/Statements/Karen%20Davis%20Testimony.pdf> ]

Lower quality and less access to health services causes unnecessary deaths every year in the US. But those who currently have access to a public health insurance option have higher chances of living longer. "In a recent report ("U.S. Health System Performance: A National Scorecard" (Schoen et al., Health Affairs, web exclusive, 2006)), the United States comes up short on key health indicators, including 'deaths before age seventy-five from conditions that are at least partially preventable or modifiable with timely and effective health care. The United States ranked fifteenth out of nineteen countries on this indicator as of 1998....The United States ranked last on infant mortality out of twenty-three industrialized countries as of 2002.' In 2002, the Institute of Medicine estimated that lack of health insurance causes roughly 18,000 unnecessary deaths each year among working-age adults in the United States. (Care Without Coverage: Too Little, Too Late, Washington, D.C.: The National Academies Press). However, according to OECD Health Data 2006, the United States is slightly above the OECD average when it comes to life expectancy at age 65—which may reflect in part the universal, guaranteed coverage provided by Medicare to America's elderly." [Economic Policy Institute, "Health Care for America," by Jacob S. Hacker, 1/11/07, available at <http://www.sharedprosperity.org/bp180/bp180.pdf> ]

If health coverage in the US were on par with other top nations, 101,000 lives could be saved each year. "Yet, on key health outcome measures the UNDERTAKER #1: More healthy people living longer.

UNDERTAKER #2: This guy’s killing us.

UNDERTAKER #1: I know.

U.S. fares average or worse. For example, on mortality from conditions ‘amenable to health care’—a measure of death rates before age 75 from diseases and conditions that are preventable or treatable with timely, effective medical care—the U.S. ranked 19th out of 19 countries, with a death rate 30 percent higher than France, Japan, and Australia. If the U.S. performance were comparable to the best three countries, it could save 101,000 lives a year.” [“Public Programs,” Testimony of Karen Davis, President of the Commonwealth Fund, before the Senate Finance Committee, June 16, 2008]

A public health insurance option would offer quality care with a broad choice of doctors. “Public insurance has a better track record than private insurance while providing inclusive, stable coverage with broad choice of providers. Our nation’s largest public insurance plan, Medicare, has greatly improved its cost-control record over the last generation, and like other programs of public insurance, it has done so with low administrative costs while offering wide choice of medical providers.” See “The Case for Public Plan Choice in National Health Reform,” by Jacob S. Hacker, PhD, published by Berkeley School of Law and the Institute for America’s Future, [http://institute.ourfuture.org/files/Jacob\_Hacker\_Public\_Plan\_Choice.pdf]

Obama’s public health insurance option would be a guaranteed backup for Americans. Consumers could never be cut from the plan, and it will always be affordable. “To quote the Obama campaign release on the proposal...No American will be turned away from any insurance plan because of illness or pre-existing conditions...Individuals and families who do not qualify for Medicaid or SCHIP but still need assistance will receive income-related federal subsidies to keep health insurance premiums affordable.” See “The Case for Public Plan Choice in National Health Reform,” by Jacob S. Hacker, PhD, published by Berkeley School of Law and the Institute for America’s Future, [http://institute.ourfuture.org/files/Jacob\_Hacker\_Public\_Plan\_Choice.pdf]

For a client we have been testing jeb bush's economic message. It has been remarkably strong. Getting even half of african americans and democrats and two thirds of latinos. Some thought it ended too harsh. But the perspective on the economy has really worked. Now we didn't tell people this was from bush. But its a warning

Our economic recovery has been everywhere but in family paychecks for tens of millions of Americans. Working Americans have a right to be frustrated because they see only a small portion of the country riding the economy's up escalator; more of us deserve to get on. Americans are working harder than ever, more than ever, and earning less than they once did. The answer to closing this opportunity gap is smaller government, lower taxes, and less government involvement so our innovators and our small businesses can get operating again.

John,

In 2010, the Citizens United decision not only opened the floodgates for unlimited corporate spending on campaigns, it also demolished transparency in campaign spending.

Five years later, BILLIONS OF DOLLARS have flowed freely through organizations that are NOT required to disclose their donors.<sup>[1]</sup>

We know that billionaires like the Koch Brothers are spending huge amounts on elections.

But there are so many “independent” groups -- funded by shady corporations and big Republican donors -- that are influencing elections in ways we don't even know. That's why we think disclosure is more important now than ever.

But John we want to know -- what do you think? Should corporations have to disclose the money they spend to influence elections?

Subject: Stand up to neocons swiftboating Hagel, now!

About | Our Candidates

Dear John,

Enough is enough. It's time to stand up against neocon swiftboating of Vietnam Veteran Chuck Hagel, and let President Obama know that we will support his nomination of Hagel, if it happens.

CLICK HERE TO SIGN OUR PETITION TO THE PRESIDENT, BACKING CHUCK HAGEL!

To remind you, neocon architects of the Iraq war, like William Kristol, are launching an outrageous, offensive smear campaign against Senator Hagel, in an attempt to scare the President from even nominating him.

They are trying to portray him as anti-Israel and even anti-Semitic in a vile attempt to keep him from the Pentagon's top job.

As a Jewish American, and friend of Chuck Hagel, I can say with no uncertainty that both charges are baseless. In fact, their cry-wolf charges undermine the ability to call out and fight true anti-Israel and anti-Semitic threats.

STAND UP TO NEOCONS AND BACK CHUCK HAGEL, HERE!

The reason they're doing this, is clear. Chuck Hagel, as a Vietnam Veteran, would put troops first. He has a record of challenging neocon dreams of preemptive use of force – and winning that debate. He has a record of challenging wasteful Pentagon spending, taking on the military-industrial complex, to ensure our defense dollars are responsibly spent on equipment we actually need. As Defense Secretary, he would do the same, and thoroughly embarrass and expose Kristol and his neocon buddies.

So please, take a stand against this swiftboating of a man who has only served America with honor. Do not let them rob us of a potentially fantastic Secretary of Defense!

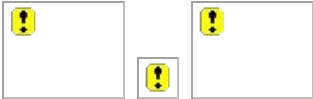

Thanks for your support.

Subject: TPP comments

John,

Nice seeing you in the park today -- great day for a run!

Reaching out because we talked to a few folks who were at a Democracy Alliance meeting where you spoke last month, when someone asked you about TPP. They said you said, "Make it go away."

We're doing a piece on this -- seems to just sort of sum up the political calculation around TPP. What we're going to write: "Any benefits that might come from the TPP, if they do, won't appear for years ahead, while the political price will be paid upfront. The progressive base is strongly opposed to the deal, and largely considers NAFTA, the major free trade deal pushed through by President Clinton, to have contributed significantly to the erosion of the middle class."

We reached out to Finney for official campaign comment, but just wanted to drop you a line too in case you had any thoughts. Thanks!

-Amanda

Jim

Andy asked me to send you the below email due to the fact he is traveling this week in Europe.

Below and attached is a letter we'd like you to send to John Podesta inviting him to be a speaker at our board meeting in January. Additionally, if you approve it (edit as needed) can you also email it to him?

Regards
Cheryl

Mr. John Podesta
Counselor to the President
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Mr. Podesta:

Thank you for your service to our nation, outside and inside the White House, and for your visionary leadership on ocean policy as a member of the Joint Ocean Commission Initiative and the Global Ocean Commission. Thank you also for the key role you played in the initiatives launched by the "Our Ocean" conference in June, including the expansion of the Pacific Remote Islands National Monument and the establishment of the "Presidential Task Force on Combating Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated (IUU) Fishing and Seafood Fraud." These Administration initiatives provide for significant advances in ocean conservation.

As a founding member and the current Secretary of Oceana's board, I am writing to invite you to speak at Oceana's Board of Directors meeting on either January 27 or 28, 2015, in Washington, DC. We would welcome you whichever day best suits your schedule.

Founded in 2001, Oceana is the largest international advocacy organization focused exclusively on ocean conservation. We work internationally to achieve measurable outcomes that help make our oceans more abundant and diverse. At our most recent board meeting, held in San Sebastian, Spain, EU Fisheries Minister Maria Damanaki spoke to the Board about her successes in leading the fisheries policy for the European Union.

Oceana's Board of Directors would be honored to hear your views and insights on ocean policy. Our board is made up of accomplished individuals from around the world, and it guides the organization to win policy campaigns that protect and restore the oceans. The board includes national and international leaders from the business sector (Simon Sidamon-Eristoff, Chair; Valarie Van Cleave, Vice Chair), philanthropy (like Kristian Parker, Rogier van Vliet, Herbert M. Bedolfe, III, and Michael Northrup), the scientific community (Dr. Daniel Pauly), the arts and entertainment sector (Ted Danson and Sam Waterston), and even a former head of state (César Gaviria of Columbia), among others. The full list of board members is here.

We invite you to join us on January 27 or 28, 2014, at a time convenient for your schedule for an hour or whatever time you could spare. The meeting will take place in Oceana's headquarters office at 1350 Connecticut Avenue NW, 5th floor, Washington, DC.

When: January 27 (Tuesday) or January 28 (Wednesday), 2015
Where: 1350 Connecticut Avenue NW, 5th floor, Washington, DC

Thank you for considering my request. For more information or to make arrangements, your staff can contact Jackie Savitz (jsavitz@oceana.org, 202-467-1916) Oceana's U.S. Vice President, or Lara Levison, Senior Director for Federal Policy (llevison@oceana.org, 202-467-1945).

Sincerely,

James Sandler

Makes total sense that they would be doing this, as they have to be aware of how much their brand is damaged, especially among anyone who isn't an older white male. But we shouldn't let them get away with it, because rebranding their party is a total façade, as evidenced by the policies they push – both economically and socially. Agree that we need to continue to drive, and perhaps more forcefully enhance, that contrast with all of our target groups. Pushing the future/past contrast is important in face of what they are trying to do here.

I watched them this morning. I was surprised by how little real estate they give to "Republican". Clearly they feel they need to peel off women and people of color. I think this makes our work driving the contrast with our target groups all the more urgent.

FYI – this group is placing large statewide buys in CO & OH (so far) to run 7/27-9/13. 60s and 30s. We are collecting totals now. Will update when we have them all.

Looks like they bill themselves as "Opportunity Lives is a news organization dedicated to discovering and highlighting real life success stories and solutions across America." Looks like the editor-in-chief is John Hart, a former aide to Coburn. "Highlights of the Solutions Center include specific strategies to reform the tax code, improve the American education system, and explore ways to increase upward mobility in American society."

Good evening all,

Attached is a short document laying out potential lines of attack on Sanders on some key contrast issues - college, health care, taxes/spending, immigration, guns, and overall. Flagging that we will not ultimately pass forward all of these -- for health care and college in particular, we tried out a few alternate arguments.

Please send comments, line edits, suggestions for additional contrasts points, etc to me and Sara by the end of the day Monday.

If it would be useful to jump on the phone Monday, happy to arrange a time -- please just let me know.

Hi John,

Ruth, and I as well as one other colleague from CAWP, are heading out to Iowa on Friday. There are two events scheduled with Hillary that we are hoping we might get to. The first is on Saturday morning, January 30th at Iowa State University in Ames and the second is on January 31st, Sunday evening at 8:00 pm in Des Moines (we'll be based in Des Moines, but we have a car).

Any advice or help you can give us on getting in to either of these (particularly the one in Des Moines) would be much appreciated.

All best wishes,

Debbie

Subject: Agenda/framework for our call

Below are the key questions I wanted to discuss on today's call. My goal is to ratify (or at least sketch out) a framework for planning proactive press, as well as reacting to the incoming.

1. What are our goals?

- Present HRC as focused on figuring out how the next President can address the challenges of the middle class
- Present the campaign planning process as smart, efficient, advanced, effective
- Give us space to recruit the best talent and plan

2. What is our strategy

- What information do we want to place proactively?
- What is our framework for reacting to process stories?

Tony previously sent you the attached invite to a reception and fundraiser for our daughter Megan Rouse, who is running for School Board in Dublin, CA. Megan is serving on the Board, having been picked through a merit selection process to fill a vacancy. She is doing a great job and is sort of running for re-election, but this is her first time before the voters. Of course, we are super proud of her and the work she is doing. While you probably aren't too vested in the outcome of local California school board races, we hope you can support her candidacy, even at a modest level, as she begins her career as an elected official. Good to get in on the ground floor.

Hope to see you at Tony's--please let Heather Kliegman know if you plan to attend.

Speaking of the fundraiser... Also in the Twin Cities, we have an op-ed in the Star-Tribune hitting McCain on the fundraising issues and his opposition to public financing... And because of today's announcement:

Excerpt from below: "McCain will try to make political hay if Obama chooses not to participate in the presidential public financing system in the general election. But we shouldn't forget that McCain himself has already opted in, and then opted out, of the presidential system this election cycle. Candidates will do most anything for money

By DAVID DONNELLY

June 18, 2008

When Sen. John McCain arrives in Minneapolis for a high-dollar fundraiser today, he will have already attended at least seven other fundraising events in five cities this week. This circuit is par for the course for our presidential candidates, who both are racing around the country as if on a giant Monopoly board, scooping up checks from whomever will write them.

And that's recently landed McCain in a bit of hot water.

McCain's campaign was forced to postpone another event this week -- scheduled in Midland, Texas -- when women's organizations questioned why he would hold a fundraiser at the home of oilman Clayton Williams. During his 1990 campaign for governor against the late Ann Richards, Williams equated rape to bad weather. "If it's inevitable, just relax and enjoy it," he said. He also promised to treat Richards as if she were a cow, saying he'd "head her and hoof her and drag her through the dirt."

The McCain campaign feigned ignorance about Williams' past, but that claim rang hollow. These unconscionable comments are widely known in Texan and national political circles, and could have been easily found with a quick Google search. The most charitable read is that the campaign used the old Sergeant Schultz defense -- "I see nothing!" -- so that they could deny ever knowing the truth if someone caught them red-handed.

How can the campaign be so oblivious? Perhaps the insatiable drive for cash is also to blame. McCain has been asked to rid the campaign of the $300,000 that Williams raised, but so far he's refused. Returning the money or donating it to a charity is the right thing to do in this case. But this political penance would only wallpaper over the real problem: Regardless of political party, candidates are required to raise ever-increasing large sums of money to run for higher office.

Much has been written about McCain's opponent, Sen. Barack Obama, and the fundraising machine he's built. The explosion of small donations to his campaign is a hopeful sign of political engagement of millions of Americans, but it does not, in and of itself, represent an overhaul of the rules for everyone else. While small online donors fuel Obama's rise, McCain's run has been increasingly dependent on large contributions to his campaign and even larger ones to the Republican National Committee. In fact, they've set a goal of raising $120 million for the party alone. And that's how most candidates do it.

McCain will try to make political hay if Obama chooses not to participate in the presidential public financing system in the general election. But we shouldn't forget that McCain himself has already opted in, and then opted out, of the presidential system this election cycle. The only reason he's gone unchecked is the lack of a quorum at the dormant Federal Election Commission.

Relatively little has been written about what the candidates intend to do about the cash-and-carry system of paying for campaigns. On the surface, one would think that the race features two reform candidates. The truth, however, is more complex. Like his shift to support President George W. Bush's policies on tax cuts and off-shore oil drilling, McCain's record on campaign finance reform is decidedly not prologue to what he would support as president.

McCain once authored a fix to the broken presidential public financing system but now refuses to add his name as cosponsor to the same bipartisan legislation. He once called his state's Clean Elections public financing law a "national model" but now states he opposes its extension to all federal races.

Obama has cosponsored both and has said that their passage would be a priority if elected.

McCain's campaign website rightly identifies one aspect of the problem of money in politics, stating that "the most influential lobbyists with the greatest access in the nation's Capitol are also the most prolific political fundraisers," but, according to Public Citizen, McCain has five times the number of lobbyists as Obama -- 70 to 14 -- raising money for his campaign.

Under comprehensive public financing systems, like those operating successfully in a number of states around the country, candidates would rely little if at all on lobbyists and fundraisers like Clayton Williams. Perhaps that's the ultimate lesson for McCain from the canceled fundraiser in Texas. Don't just vet the fundraisers. Overhaul the system.

Republican John McCain will bring his presidential campaign to Minnesota for the first time today, holding an early evening town hall meeting in St. Paul with a select group of undecided voters after a late afternoon fundraiser in Minneapolis.

None of the events is open to the public.

An earlier public event tentatively planned for Eagan has been canceled, a campaign aide said.

Facing a November showdown with Democrat Barack Obama, McCain hopes to push purple Minnesota into the red column for the first time in 36 years and pick up some much-needed cash in the process.

Tickets for his fundraising reception, starting at 5:30 p.m. at the Hilton Minneapolis, range from $1,000 a person for dinner to a private reception for individuals and couples who raise $50,000.

The Arizona senator needs the money. Through April, Obama had raised $265 million to McCain's $97 million.

The town hall meeting will be at the Landmark Center in downtown St. Paul, just a block from the Xcel Energy Center where McCain will receive the Republican presidential nomination in September.

The event is by ticket only. The campaign did not say how they selected undecided voters to attend the meeting.

The crowd will not come close to matching the 30,000 people who swarmed the "X" on June 3 to hear Obama declare victory in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

McCain's visit suggests he considers Minnesota a battleground state. Although Democrats have carried it in the past eight elections — their longest winning streak in any state — the past two presidential contests have been close. In 2000, Al Gore narrowly defeated George W. Bush, 48 percent to 46 percent, and four years ago, John Kerry topped Bush 51 percent to 48 percent.

Polls suggest McCain is within striking distance in Minnesota. The most recent one showed he and Obama are virtually tied.

Obama led McCain, 47 percent to 46 percent, in a Survey USA poll released Monday. That survey, conducted for KSTP-TV and two other Minnesota television stations, had a 4.3 percentage point margin of error, making the race a dead heat.

But the average of the three most recent statewide polls gives Obama a 9-point lead, 50 percent to 41 percent. The Rasmussen Report and the Star Tribune's Minnesota Poll conducted the other surveys.

"It is clearly a dead heat," Ben Golnik, McCain's regional campaign manager, said Wednesday. "We think we've out-organized Obama. Our offices opened ahead of theirs. We have more staff on the ground, and we feel good about it."

In addition, Gov. Tim Pawlenty is McCain's national campaign co-chairman and is frequently mentioned as a possible running mate. But when asked to comment on McCain's visit, Pawlenty said ... nothing. He failed to respond to a Pioneer Press request for an interview on the event.

He did, however, find time to publicly criticize Obama before the Democratic candidate held his St. Paul rally.

But the governor has not had a discernible impact on the presidential race in Minnesota so far, said Donna Cassutt, associate chair of the state Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party.

"Minnesotans are not buying what John McCain is selling, and Gov. Pawlenty is not helping him to close the deal," Cassutt said. "As we recall, Gov. Pawlenty couldn't even carry his own party's caucuses for McCain."

McCain finished a distant second behind former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney in Minnesota's Feb. 5 Republican precinct caucuses.

But McCain won 35 of the 41 Republican National Convention delegates elected at GOP conventions around Minnesota this spring.

Subject: Time for the Ninjas to Run Again

You'd never know it from the weather outside, but believe it or not in just 20 short days, spring will have sprung. And what better way to celebrate the end of this ridiculous winter than to get outside with some friends...

For the third year in a row, the Ninjas will be running the Capitol Hill Classic – a 10k race on Sunday May 18th – and we hope you will join us. Last year, the Ninjas came in at an impressive 4th place overall – and 2nd for teams with both a top male and female finisher! (Our CAP women's program rocks on so many levels!) And, we're feeling pretty good about our chances for this year's race.

You DO NOT need to be an experienced or a fast runner to join the team. All runners/joggers are welcome! The Capitol Hill Classic only uses the finishing times of a team's fastest three participants to calculate winning speeds, so most people's finish times are irrelevant. It really is just a great opportunity to get outside with some of your colleagues. Even Fenstermacher can handle this one!

If you have already signed up or plan on doing so, please send me a quick "I'm in".

Thanks and hope to see you out there!
Tamara

"Running helps me stay on an even keel and in an optimistic frame of mind."
- Bill Clinton

DATE: Sunday May 18, 2014

TIME: 8:30 am

LOCATION: The Capitol Hill Classic will start and finish at Stanton Park about 3 blocks from the US Capitol on the Senate side.

FAQ:

Do I have to be fast to run on the team?

No!! Only the top 3 runners count towards the timed score, so unless you are one of them, you can enjoy the race at whatever pace you are comfortable. In fact, this will be the first race for a few CAP runners! And as a bonus - because this race runs through a neighborhood, there will be lots of folks out on the course to cheer you whatever your pace.

I was never good at math. How far is 10K?

About 6.2 miles.

Should I do this?

YES!!!! In fact, no one, in the history of the CAP team has finished and said "I wish I hadn't run today". Plus, this race helps support a great DC public school. So sign up!

How do I sign up and join the team?

Register online here . During the registration process, be sure to select "Progressive Ninjas" from the drop down menu as your team affiliation. The password for our team is "progress". Save $2 off the registration cost if you sign up before May 16th.

What if I already registered for the race and I want to join the team now?

Email me (Tamara), and I can make sure you get added to the roster.

What about my family, should I bring them along?

Sure. This is a family-friendly event. In fact, at the conclusion of the 10k, the Capitol Hill Cluster puts on a quick 3K and a kids run that a number of CAP children will be running in. (Of course during the 10K, these children will be happily on the sidelines with someone else, cheering us on. We do run to win after all...)

I'm an intern. Can I run?

Of course – the more the merrier.

Subject: Re: Updated doc for background press briefing

A few thoughts:

On the question of whether HRC's wealth makes her out of touch, like Romney: This isn't about proving that HRC is just like the people she wants to represent. This is about proving that she will fight for those people and has ideas that will make a difference in their lives. Romney's problem was that his proposals helped those at the top, not everyday Americans. Remember the 47%??

On O'Malley/Sanders: We ought to slip a line into that answer something like, "We know they'll be battling each other...."

On expectations in Iowa and NH, haven't each of those states backgrounded press on specific numbers and past vote history? It would be good to share some of those numbers.

Subject: Fwd: Updated doc for background press briefing

Wanted to let you know that we have had so many media requests this week to get background info about the launch, details on our summer plans and visit the office that we decided to consolidate them and do a backgrounder tomorrow afternoon with our regulars to give an overview of our thinking followed by a casual happy hour afterwards so they can see the HQ. For those of you in town, it would be great to have you join us for the happy hour, plan to start at 6 pm.

We updated our overall talking points to reflect how we want to frame the launch and summer - and plan to use these as a guide for talking with the press tomorrow. We would love your thoughts and edits.

We will resume our 8 am call on Friday and review our plans for next week and the launch on June 13.

Subject: HRC work in SC for CDF

I wanted to make sure everyone had our background on HRC's work for the Children's Defense Fund that took her to South Carolina.

1973: Hillary Clinton Went To Work For The Children's Defense Fund. "That would take us back to 1973, the year she graduated from Yale law school and went to work for the Children's Defense Fund, interviewing juvenile offenders and dropouts." [CBS News Transcript, 2/29/08]

Hillary Clinton "Participated In A Project To Find Out Why 2 Million U.S. Children Were Not In School. The Activists Knocked On Doors In Selected Census Tracts Across The Country." "One of the group's first staff lawyers was Hillary Rodham, who participated in a project to find out why 2 million U.S. children were not in school. The activists knocked on doors in selected census tracts across the country and concluded many public schools were excluding children who either were not Anglos, did not speak English, were too poor to pay for books or needed medical help." Los Angeles Times, [4/7/93 ]

Subsequent Report "Led To A Federal Law Guaranteeing Education For Disabled Children." "The group's subsequent detailed report (now a standard CDF strategy) led to a federal law guaranteeing education for disabled children as well as lawsuits challenging some schools' practices." Los Angeles Times, [4/7/93 ]

Hillary Listed As CDF Staff In The Children's Defense Fund Report "Children Out Of School In America." Children Out Of School In America, CDF, [October 1974 ]

Knocking Doors In New Bedford, Hillary Clinton "Found Children Who Weren't In School Because Of Physical Disabilities Like Blindness And Deafness." "In New Bedford, Massachusetts, I went door to door trying to identify the source of a troubling statistic. At CDF, we took census figures of school-age children and compared those numbers to school enrollments. We often found significant discrepancies, and we wanted to determine where these unaccounted-for children were. Knocking on doors was revelatory and heartbreaking. I found children who weren't in school because of physical disabilities like blindness and deafness. I also found school-age siblings at home, babysitting their younger brothers and sisters while their parents worked. On the small back porch off her family's home in a neighborhood of Portuguese-American fishermen, I met a girl in a wheelchair, who told me how much she wanted to go to school. She knew she couldn't go because she couldn't walk." [Living History, pg. 79]

Children Out Of School In America Was The First In A Series Of Reports From The Children's Defense Fund, Followed By A Report On Children In Adult Jails. "Children Out of School in America" is the first in a series of reports we will issue during the next several months on conditions of children which urgently require recognition and correction. These include problems of (1) children in adult jails; (2) children of women prisoners; and (3) school and other children's record keeping practices." Children Out Of School In America, CDF, [October 1974 ]

Children Out Of School In America Included Reporting On Children In Adult Jails. "There are other children who have tried to enroll at some time but who were not accepted by the school system. They want to be in school, but are told by school officials that it is not the place they should be. These are excluded children, such as: --children who register too late in the school year -incontinent children or those with spina bifida1. --children whom school officials deem "immature" -older children who try to enroll for the first time in a new school district --children on waiting lists for special programs -special needs children for whom there are no appropriate programs, particularly the physically, mentally, and emotionally handicapped, and non-English-speaking or bilingual children -children who are beyond normal transportation routes in remote rural areas -children in jails2." Children Out Of School In America, CDF, [October 1974 ]

Children Out Of School In America Found 38,000 Children Under 16 Are In Jail On Any Given Day. "These children are, in fact, totally out of school during the period of their jail detention. About 38,000 children under age 16 are in jail on a given day. This figure does not include city jails and lock-ups. A subsequent CDP study of children in adult jails will show that the figures used do not tell the whole story: it is likely that between 250,000 and 400,000 children are jailed annually. There is no education provided in jail." Children Out Of School In America, CDF, [October 1974 ]

In South Carolina, Hillary Wrote She Helped Investigate The Living Conditions Of Juvenile Offenders Held In Adult Jails. "Bill was coming home to Arkansas and taking a teaching job in Fayetteville, at the University of Arkansas School of Law. I was moving to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to work for Marian Wright Edelman at the newly created Children's Defense Fund (CDF). I rented the top floor of an old house, where I lived alone for the first time. I loved the work, which involved a lot of travel and exposure to problems affecting children and teenagers around the country. In South Carolina I helped investigate the conditions under which juveniles were incarcerated in adult jails. Some of the fourteen- and fifteen-year-olds I interviewed were in jail for minor transgressions. Others were already serious offenders. Either way, none of them should have been sharing cells with hard-core adult criminals, who could prey on them or further educate them in criminality. CDF led an effort to separate out juveniles and provide them with more protection and faster adjudication." [Living History, pg. 79]

Herb:

Of course Art Laffer is an ass,, but many have forgotten or never heard of the Laffer Curve. He's still in the business of telling people what they want to hear. It's the people who want to hear it that scare me. This state-city thing is worrisome. Even in Massachusetts there are old folks who don't have children or grandchildren in the public schools and therefore won't vote for a decent school budget in their own town. Where did Evolution go wrong?

It's amazing that after all this time that any rational, sentient being can take Arthur Laffer seriously. One would think they would be embarrassed to even mention his name. I think Bob once said something to the effect that the half life of stupidity is a very long time or something like that.

As Republicans debate party future, aggressive 'corporate dating service' launches new group to push for conservative policies

Ed Pilkington in New York

Wednesday 30 July 2014

theguardian.com

<http://www.theguardian.com/world/2014/jul/30/alec-acce-lobby-local-tax-cuts-republicans>

The corporate lobbying network American Legislative Exchange Council, commonly known as Alec, is seeking to extend its brand of aggressive privatization and tax cuts to the local level, with the launch on Wednesday of a new offshoot focused on America's cities and counties.

The new network, the American City County Exchange (ACCE), will hold its first public meeting in Dallas, Texas, on Wednesday. It is timed to sit alongside Alec's annual meeting at which the parent body will debate its usual menu of conservative priorities – pushing back government regulation, fighting moves to curb climate change, reducing trade union powers and cutting taxes. A similar emphasis is evident in the first agenda set for the new offshoot, with the distinction that ACCE hopes to influence elected officials in city and county councils while Alec has its sights largely set on state legislatures. An early draft of the agenda for today's meeting revealingly listed ACCE's very first workshop under the simple title: "Privatization" – though in the final version the wording had been sanitized into: "Effective Tools for Promoting Limited Government".

A later workshop scheduled for Thursday is called: "Releasing Local Governments from the Grip of Collective Bargaining". Alec has been described variously as a "corporate bill mill" and as a "corporate dating service". It brings together lobbyists for big businesses and elected politicians into the same room, and encourages them to frame business-friendly legislation that is then made concrete in the form of model pieces of legislation that are disseminated in state assemblies throughout the country.

The new network, ACCE, will follow the same basic structure, with corporate lobbyists introduced through the organization to elected city and county council members with the aim of promoting policies advantageous to those companies. Big businesses are asked to pay up to \$25,000 a year for the privilege of having such direct and intimate input into the legislative process.

In recent months Alec has suffered a loss of income and membership after it became engulfed in controversy over its backing for “stand-your-ground” laws. The lobbying network was sharply criticized for helping to spread around the country such laws – which give gun owners the right to use deadly force outside the home should they have a reasonable belief that they are in great danger – in the wake of the shooting in Florida of the black teenager Trayvon Martin.

The Guardian disclosed in December that Alec had initiated a “prodigal son project” aimed at attracting back corporate donors that had broken off ties as a result of the “stand-your-ground” furor.

Critics of the organization fear that Alec’s drive towards anti-government policies at state level will now be replicated in cities throughout the country. “Through the new network ACCE, we are likely to see big corporations trying to extend their influence down to the very local level. For relatively little investment, corporations stand not only to have a very big influence over city politicians, but they could also make a lot of money through privatization of public services,” said Nick Surgey, director of research at The Progressive that monitors Alec’s activities.

Dissent in conservative ranks

Alec’s annual meeting opens in Dallas amid renewed debate about the direction that many Republican-held state legislatures are moving, partly under the encouragement of the lobbying network. The most contentious current example is Kansas, where the Republican governor Sam Brownback introduced earlier this year the largest tax cut in the state’s history.

The tax cuts have left the state with a budget hole that some predictions suggest could reach almost $800m by 2017. The prospect of massive cuts to public services has prompted a backlash, with 104 present or former Republican officeholders in the state putting out a joint statement earlier this month in which they expressed alarm about the Brownback plan and said they were endorsing his Democratic rival for governor, Paul Davis.

The Brownback tax cuts were devised on the advice of the economist Arthur Laffer. He is the co-author of Alec’s annual report, Rich States, Poor States \(pdf\), that ranks each state in the country according to a set of conservative standards including low taxes, limited trade union rights and reduced regulations.

Laffer is also centrally involved in the launch of Alec’s new city initiative. On Thursday he will be guest of honour at the ACCE lunch.

Surgey said that city-based politicians needed to be wary of the new network. “Under ACCE’s influence, local councils will see more privatization, more public services sold off or cut, and decision-making increasingly in the hands of large corporations far away.”

But Todd Grayson, a city council politician from Perrysburg, Ohio, who is a founding member of ACCE, said the ambition was to increase the efficiency of public services by learning about best practices from all over the country. Though he added: “Clearly, our goal in ACCE is limited government.”

Subject: a big idea

John:

I would like to have thirty minutes of your time any time this week or next (sooner the better) to go into more detail on an idea that I think Tom Daschle is forwarding to you today. Now that Senator Obama's victory seems likely (I've been cheering you on for months) the time is right to discuss the concept with his transition people. It seems to me a perfect fit for the man, for the times, and for the remarkable online volunteer army he has built.

Give me 30 minutes, any time, anywhere, and I will be there -- with all the planning detail and backup I have been working hard to put together. (I'm not interested in anything out of this other than to turn it over to competent people; the times are too serious and the idea is too big to do anything else.)

In case you missed Secretary Clinton's inspiring victory speech in South Carolina last night, I wanted to send you the full transcript.

Thank you!!

Remarks at a Get out the Vote Event

February 26, 2016

HILLARY CLINTON: (Applause.) Thank you. Thank you so much, South Carolina.

AUDIENCE: Hillary! Hillary! Hillary!

HILLARY CLINTON: Thank you. Thank you. Thank you. Thank you so much from one end of this state to another. I am so greatly appreciative because today, you sent a message: in America, when we stand together – (applause) – when we stand together, there is no barrier too big to break. (Applause.) We've now gone through four early states and I want to congratulate Senator Sanders on running a great race. (Applause.) And tomorrow, this campaign goes national. (Applause.)

We are going to compete for every vote in every state. We are not taking anything, and we're not taking anyone, for granted. (Applause.) I want to thank all the local leaders, legislators, mayors, pastors, organizers, volunteers who have worked their heart out for this campaign. I thank all of our great South Carolina friends going back so many years. I especially want to thank two of your former great Democratic governors, Dick Riley and Jim Hodges. (Applause.) And I especially want to thank your champion, your statesman in Congress, Jim Clyburn. (Applause.) I am so looking forward to working the congressman to make the changes and continue the progress that we can build on the record and accomplishments of President Obama. (Applause.) And to the almost 850,000 people who have contributed what they could, most giving less than $100, I thank each and every one of you.

Now, every day since Iowa, more and more of you have stepped up. Today, grassroots donors are powering this campaign. (Applause.) And to the millions of people watching across our country, please join us by making a donation to hillaryclinton.com. (Applause.) And here's why: because together, we can break down all the barriers holding our families and our country back. We can build ladders of opportunity and empowerment so every single American can have that chance to live up to his or her God-given potential. (Applause.) And then – then, and only then – can America live up to its full potential too. (Applause.)

This campaign and this victory tonight is for the parents and teachers in rural South Carolina. (Applause.) They showed me crumbling classrooms in communities too long neglected. We're going to work together to give our children the education they need and deserve here in South Carolina and across America. (Applause.) This campaign and our victory is for the entrepreneur who told me more dreams die in the parking lots of banks than anywhere else, and that's especially true for women and people of color. So we're going to work together to give people, particularly young people, the tools you need – (applause) – to start that small business you've been dreaming of.

And this campaign and our victory is for the reverend, a presiding elder of the AME Church, who looked at all the violence and division in our country and asked me the other night how – how are we ever going to strengthen the bonds of family and community again? Well, we're going to start by working together. With more love and kindness in our hearts and more respect for each other, even when we disagree. (Applause.)

Despite what you hear, we don't need to make America great again; America has never stopped being great. (Applause.) But we do need to make America whole again. (Applause.) Instead of building walls, we need to be tearing down barriers. (Applause.) We need to show, by everything we do, that we really are in this together. Today, too many people at the top, too many corporations, have forgotten this basic truth about what makes America great. Prescription drug companies that increase the price of drugs for no reason than greed, and then double and triple bills of folks overnight; corporations that use show games to shift their headquarters overseas for no other reason than to avoid paying their fair share of taxes; companies like Johnson Controls, an auto parts company in Wisconsin, that we taxpayers helped to save with the auto rescue in 2008. Now, let there be no doubt in any boardroom or executive suite across this country: if you cheat your employees, exploit your customers, pollute our environment, or rip off the taxpayers, we will hold you accountable. (Applause.) If you turn your back on America, you'll pay a price. But if you do the right thing – if you invest in your workers and in your country's future – then we will stand with you.

Now, together we have to break down all the barriers – not just some. It's important that Wall Street never threaten Main Street again. No bank can be too big to fail and no executive too powerful to jail. (Applause.) But America isn't a single-issue country, my friends. We need more than a plan for the biggest banks. The middle class needs a raise. (Applause.) And we need more good jobs. (Applause.) Jobs that pay well and can't be outsourced. (Applause.) Jobs that provide dignity and a path to a brighter future, and we can create those good jobs by building on the progress we've made under President Obama. So let's make new investments in manufacturing and small business, in scientific research, in clean energy – enough clean energy to power every home in America. (Applause.)

And don't let anybody tell you we can't make things in America. I know we can and I know we will. (Applause.) Let's break down the barriers that keep people on the sidelines of our economy, especially women. (Applause.) Don't you think we've waited long enough for quality, affordable childcare and paid family leave? Don't you think it's time for equal pay for equal work? (Applause.) And let's break down the barriers that stop our children from getting the best possible start in life. We need to support great teachers and great schools in every ZIP code. (Applause.) Let's break down the barriers holding back our young people, especially the student debt that makes it hard to imagine ever living the life you want. (Applause.) And we are going to give special support to our historically black colleges and universities which play a vital role in this state and across our country. (Applause.)

Now, breaking down all the barriers means we also have to face the reality of systemic racism that, more than a half a century after Rosa Parks sat and Dr. King marched and John Lewis bled, still plays a significant role in determining who gets ahead in America and who gets left behind. We have to invest in communities of color, reform our broken criminal justice and immigration systems. (Applause.) We have to guarantee opportunity, dignity and justice for every American. And tonight, I want to pay tribute to five extraordinary women who crisscrossed this state with me and for me – five mothers brought together by tragedy: Sybrina Fulton, mother of Trayvon Martin, shot and killed in Florida just for walking down the street; Lucia McBath, mother of Jordan Davis, shot and killed by someone who thought he was playing his music too loud in his car; Maria Hamilton, mother of Dontre, shot and killed by police in Milwaukee; Gwen Carr, mother of Eric Garner, choked to death after being stopped for selling loose cigarettes on the street; and Geneva Reed-Veal, mother of Sandra Bland, who died in police custody in Texas. They all lost children, which is almost unimaginable. Yet they have not been broken or embittered. Instead, they have channeled their sorrow into a strategy and their mourning into a movement. And they are reminding us of something deep and powerful in the American spirit.

By now, we all know the story of Flint, Michigan – how a city's children were poisoned by toxic water because their governor wanted to save a little money. But there's another side to the story in Flint. It's a story of a community that's been knocked down but refused to be knocked out. It's hundreds of union plumbers coming from across the country to help install new water fixtures. It's students raising funds for water deliveries and showing up in Flint to distribute supplies. It's the United Auto Workers and General Motors donating millions of dollars. We know there are many other Flints out there – communities that have been left out and left behind.

But for every problem we face anywhere in America, someone somewhere is working to solve it. Our country was built by people who had each other's backs, who understood we all have to do our part, and that at our best, we all rise together. Imagine what we can all build together when each and every American has the chance to live up to his or her potential. Imagine a tomorrow where no child grows up in the shadow of discrimination or under the specter of deportation. Imagine a tomorrow where every parents can find a good job and every grandparent can enjoy a secure retirement. Imagine a tomorrow where hard work is honored, families are supported, and communities are strong. When we trust and respect each other, despite all that divides us.

So please, join us in this campaign for our country's future. Go to hillaryclinton.com or text "Join," J-o-i-n, to 47246 right now.

On one of my first trips to South Carolina during this campaign, I stopped by a bakery here in Columbia. I was just saying hello to everybody. I went over to say hello to a man reading a book in the corner. It turned out he was a minister and the book was a Bible. He was studying I Corinthians 13, which happens to be one of my favorite passages. "Love never fails," it tells us, "love bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things." (Applause.) These are words to live by, not only for ourselves, but also for our country. I know it sometimes seems a little odd for someone running for president in these days, in this time, to say we need more love and kindness in America. But I'm telling you from the bottom of my heart we do. We do. We have so much to look forward to. There is no doubt in my mind that America's best years can be ahead of us. We have got to believe that. We've got to work for that. We have to stand with each other. We have to hold each other up, lift each other up, move together into the future that we will make.

Thank you, God bless you, and God bless America. (Applause.)

 Organizing for America

John --

As a grassroots organization, it's essential that we hear from Organizing for America supporters like you.

So we put together a survey to get your thoughts. It will only take a few minutes, and it's a great way to shape our future work.

Re: Nov 5th and beyond

Not knowing where the transition will be taking place and that the Scheduling and Advance staff currently located in Chicago have leases ending on or around Election Day, I wanted to submit a memo of questions to get an understanding of what exactly this department should be prepared for in the event Barack Obama is the president-elect on Wednesday, November 5th.

If there is a reference or document that exists online that can answer any of these questions, please let me know. Thanks very much.

- Is there a schedule/plan being prepared for November 5th (in the event of a “win” scenario)?
- If so, who is putting together the schedule for BO for November 5th
- Beyond November 5th who is in charge of BO’s schedule, is there a plan/schedule being prepared?
- Are there provisions for some advance and scheduling staff to be immediately switched to transition payroll? This provides that BO will do a staff thank-you event, victory tour and/or first trip to Washington DC. Should I be preparing a plan of who would be transitioned?
- Is there an operation in place that switches over method of payment for expenses for midnight on the 5th and beyond? A transition credit card? Will we need to rely on wire transfers?
- For any national advance staff traveling on the road, should we ensure we purchase their tickets to their homes prior to Election Day? Will there be any ability to use OFA funds past Election Day if we in fact win.
- We have a contract for our 757. Do I need to have a new contract prepared and ready to go in the event we win and are a new entity?
  - What aircraft does the president-elect travel on?
- Should the traveling staff have arrangements in place to remain in Chicago? Should they be sent to Washington DC?

Subject: Hi, Jake:

Hope all is well.

I'm working on a piece about the role we might see John Podesta play in a Hillary campaign. Wanted to see if you might have a minute to talk over the next couple of days.

I'm at 202-862-9218.

Thanks for your help!

Best,

Dear Family and Friends,

I wanted to let you know that I was diagnosed with throat cancer yesterday. The good news is that the prognosis from my doctors is excellent, the cancer was caught quickly, and my condition is curable. Following thorough tests that included an MRI, a biopsy, and a PET/CT scan, the cancer is confined to the original site and the adjacent lymph nodes on the right side of my neck. Importantly, there is no evidence of cancer elsewhere in my body.

My evaluation and treatment plan are still being finalized, but at this time it appears I will begin radiation and chemotherapy treatment shortly in NYC which should take about eight weeks. Over the next few days we will be focused on getting the right treatment plan in place and getting started. While the treatment will limit my travel away from NYC, I should be able to carry out my normal routine.

Christine has been a source of great comfort and support and I am lucky to have her by my side, a wonderful family, caring friends, and the best medical care in the world.

I wanted to make sure you to hear this from me first, as word tends to travel fast and I am focused on dealing with the doctors.

Warmest regards,

Tom

I agree w everything that's been said except I would shorten even more. Make her point and not get into details. Something like

Our immigration system is broken and needs reform.

I applaud President Obama for taking an important step today, but this problem will not be fully fixed until Democrats and Republicans come together to pass real, comprehensive reform.

I join the President, thousands of families and business leaders in calling on Congress to get something done.

I support the President's executive action, in keeping with his responsibilities and well-established legal precedent, to focus finite resources on deporting felons rather than families. No one thinks that these new steps are the ideal solution, or that they will solve all of the fundamental problems in our immigration system. But there is also broad consensus that the status quo is untenable. For years the House of Representatives has abdicated its responsibility to take on this challenge, not only refusing to act on the bipartisan Senate legislation but also failing to advance any viable alternatives. Some will say he went too far, others, not far enough, but given this vacuum of leadership, President Obama had no better option. Only Congress can finish this job, and in the days ahead we should look to our elected representatives to take up that responsibility and pass a long-term bipartisan solution.

I hope the President's announcement will mark the beginning of a serious and substantive national debate about the way forward. Because there's so much more to do if we're going to really fix our broken immigration system – if we're going to keep families together, treat everyone with dignity and compassion, uphold the rule of law, protect our national security, and respect our heritage and history. Bringing millions of hard-working people out of the shadows and into the formal economy, so they can hold their heads high, pay taxes, and contribute to our shared prosperity, is one of the most effective steps we could take to accelerate our economic recovery and raise wages across the board for hard-working Americans. It would also reflect the best values of an open and inclusive nation.

As we move forward, let's remember that people of good will and good faith will continue to view this issue differently. Our arguments may grow heated at times, but if we proceed in a spirit of respect and shared purpose, I am confident that we can yet find our way toward common ground. Through it all, I hope we never lose sight of the fact that we're not talking about abstract statistics – we're talking about real families with real experiences. We're talking about children coming home from school to an empty house, their moms and dads whisked away without notice or explanation. We're talking about parents lying awake at night afraid of the knock on the door that could upend their lives and tear their families apart. We're talking about the fate of people who love this country, work hard, and want nothing more than a chance to contribute to the community and build a better life for themselves and their families. That's what this debate is about and why inaction is not an option.

Sorry. I will try to be constructive in the am but this reads and feels like what folks would expect from her who are not a fan or who believe she is running - a calculated effort to have it all in a statement with something for everyone.

I would opt for a shorter, simpler formulation - which I know is near impossible or that is what we would be reading from you. I worry though that this in form and in substance will remind folks what they don't like about politicians and her.

The heart of it is:

- 1) does she support the action the President is taking and would she have taken it?
- 2) And given the action, what is the path forward she sees for the country?

Below is what I think she should say about the President's executive action, either in statement form or on camera. It's long, but this is not a simple issue and we have a lot of interests and constituencies to consider. I've tried here to express support for POTUS without getting bogged down in the details of what is sure to be an unpopular measure, seen as both too much and too little, and then pivot to the need for broader Congressional action (defined by a set of principles rather than by slavish attachment to the DOA Senate bill). I also went back to our 2013 statement on gay marriage and reprised the theme of urging respectful, substantive debate and recognizing that a lot of people aren't going to agree with us on this. Finally, I tried to root the issue in the lived experiences of actual families, to make this a debate about human beings rather than legal precedents.

I know she's eager to take a look, so it would be great to hear quick reactions.
Thanks

Subject: Catholic Efforts on Iran Update

Dear friends and colleagues,

Good morning! Let me apologize in advance for a lengthy e-mail. If you don't have time to read the whole thing, I've bolded the important points.

- Our advertisement began running on National Catholic Reporter and Commonweal yesterday. Right now, when you click the advertisement, the link takes you to MoveOn's 60 Day to Stop A War Take Action website. From there, you are able to dial into your Member of Congress and request them to support the Iran Deal.

At some point today, that link will change to our own website, which will list all the groups' names, simple talking points, and give people a chance to dial in three elected officials (their one US Representatives and two Senators). While the MoveOn site is very effective, ours will ensure that people calling into the offices identify as a person of faith, which is important in both our narrative creation (Catholics support the deal) and coalition building (the God Squad takes action).

We will have a good data metric in the next few days about how the advertisement is doing.

- The letters to both Senators Cardin and Mikulski have been e-mailed, faxed, and snail mailed to the appropriate parties. This morning, I will make follow up calls to the state chief of staffs and schedulers. I imagine we'll know early next week if they plan on meeting with our groups' representatives. If it appears that isn't the case, I'm developing a grass-tops digital strategy and local media strategy to encourage them to change their minds. This will hopefully only boost the great work and meetings made possible by the work of Bob, Marie D, Marie L, Ben, and others.
- On that note, I have phone calls early next week with senior advocacy staffers for the Archdiocese of Baltimore, Archdiocese of Washington (which includes territory in Maryland), and the Maryland Catholic Conference.

While I think there should be many goals for these meetings, I think the top-line goal is pretty clear: we need Archbishop William Lori and Cardinal Donald Wuerl to make direct appeals to Senators Cardin and Mikulski on this issue. While I don't have any advance knowledge, I have a sense from the conversations setting up the meetings that there might be willingness for that to happen.

- I will be sending an additional e-mail to our C4 community on Tuesday to asking them to contact their Members of Congress. This was remarkably successful last week. Based on the digital metrics, we can safely assume thousands of our Catholic brothers and sisters are taking action on this issue. My colleagues will be working with our allies to scan the local newspapers this upcoming week to see if people are communicating faith values in supporting the deal to letters to the editors in newspapers across the nation. My initial sense is that they are. That would be something to be proud of for our group.
- I'll be taking some time off on both today and Monday to rejuvenate myself as my colleagues and I continue our grueling preparation for Pope Francis's apostolic trip to the US. As you can imagine, Iran is just a portion of the work we're doing in preparation for the Holy Father's trip.

From Friday afternoon until Monday morning (the traditional weekend), I'll be on retreat and won't be accessible by phone or e-mail. However, you can reach me today and Monday through my colleagues (CC'd here) who know how to get a hold of me.

- Thank you for being patient with me as I attempt to navigate the unified, but--at times--diverse hopes and expectations of the group. I will continue to try to balance the goals and needs of the group with the pressure to move the ball forward with the clock winding down in the fourth quarter of this important effort. I spoke to the White House yesterday and they assure us the media's moniker calling us "God Squad" isn't just sweet nothings, but actually a fair assessment of the substantial difference we're making in this conversation.

Thank you again for all your hard work and continued support. And if you get a chance, please pray for me and my colleagues as we enter into some needed rest this weekend!

Subject: National Journal: CTR Releases HRC Energy Analysis

National Journal: "Clinton Ally Defending Her From Keystone Attacks"

By Emily Schultheis

January 22, 2015

[Subtitle:] The Democratic opposition research firm Correct The Record is touting her record on energy.

Hillary Clinton has long avoided addressing whether she supports the construction of the Keystone XL pipeline – a project that earns rare bipartisan support in the Senate but is opposed by the Obama administration. Her latest dodge came in Canada, where she gave two paid speeches Wednesday and offered no comment on the subject.

But she's now getting an assist from a leading Democratic opposition research firm in defending her record on energy. Correct the Record, an arm of American Bridge which is closely allied with Clinton's campaign, will release a new report today boosting the former Secretary of State's record on other energy issues, a move that comes as the new Republican-controlled Senate debates a Keystone vote.

The report lists nine areas where Clinton was involved in energy-related efforts, including "fighting for clean energy" in the Senate and "prioritizing cleaner energy worldwide."

Speaking at a "Global Perspectives" event in Winnipeg Wednesday, Clinton again declined to state her position on the pipeline, a move that dominated much of the coverage following the speech. "We have differences and you won't get me to talk about Keystone because I have steadily made it clear that I'm not going to express an opinion," she said. "It is in our process and that's where it belongs." (She's previously said it would be inappropriate for her to offer a position either way, given her tenure at State and the State Department's ongoing formal review process.)

The report, titled, "Hillary Clinton: Smart Energy Innovation," doesn't mention Keystone, but focuses on Clinton's efforts on other aspects of energy policy from her tenure in the U.S. Senate and as Secretary of State.

"Hillary Clinton's record on energy policy and the environment demonstrates that she acutely recognizes the challenges and realities we face," Correct the Record spokeswoman Adrienne Watson said. "She has fought to advance clean, alternative energy solutions to create jobs, boost our economy and preserve the environment for future generations."

While in the Senate, Correct the Record notes, Clinton co-sponsored legislation like the Clean Power Act and the Diesel Emissions Reduction Act to encourage better technologies for power plants and vehicles. She also co-sponsored the Electric Reliability Act to help modernize America's power grid.

At State, Clinton helped coordinate a regional partnership with other countries in the Americas to promote clean energy development and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The report also notes her role in launching the U.S.-Africa Clean Energy Finance Initiative, as well as her efforts to bring China to the table to cooperate on energy and environmental goals.

Correct the Record has put out similar reports to bolster Clinton's record on other issues: they began with one on the economy last spring and have hit on the former Secretary of State's record on issues such as foreign policy, minimum wage raises and education. As the sole group defending Clinton ahead of her expected 2016 campaign, Correct the Record has worked to get out ahead of Clinton critics on issues as they arise.

Keystone, in particular, is a politically fraught issue for Clinton, because taking a stance either way would disappoint different segments of the Democratic electorate. By saying she supports construction of the pipeline, which would run from Canada to the Gulf Coast, Clinton would put herself at odds with the White House, which has vowed a veto should Republicans pass legislation approving it. And among key Democratic constituencies, environmental groups oppose the pipeline, while labor leaders have said it would help create jobs.

Asked about Clinton's lack of a position Keystone, Watson echoed Clinton's own rationale for not commenting on the issue.

"Secretary Clinton has repeatedly stated that, as the former Secretary of State who oversaw the department charged with completing the environmental assessment of the Keystone project, it would be inappropriate to comment and risk influencing the process until this assessment is complete."

Subject: Invite of Common Sense Media -- Research Launch Event and Cocktail Reception at Delaney Home

To: April Delaney <a.delaney@verizon.net>

Dear Friends,

As the Washington Director for Common Sense Media, I have had the privilege to be part of their advocacy and research efforts for almost nine (9) years. Now that Common Sense has evolved into one of the largest non-profits in the country focused on the well-being of children, our next big step is into the funding of research and understanding of media and its impact on the health of our nation's kids. As such, I am thrilled to announce some research which John and I have helped support and which was recently completed by Vicky Rideout. The study focuses on the use of media by Tweens and Teens (e.g. differences in technology use between girls and boys, the means by which technology is differently utilized according to social and economic factors.) The findings of this seminal research is being launched at an event on the morning of November 4th at the Kaiser Conference Center 1330 G Street, NW Washington DC. There will also be an accompanying panel discussion with CSM Founder Jim Steyer, Northwestern Professor Ellen Wartella, an FCC Commissioner, Mike McCurry, and Gary Knell, CEO of national Geographic. A copy of the invitation to this event is attached, and I would love it if you are able to attend this launch if it fits into your morning schedule.

In addition, if you are unable to attend the launch, John and I are hosting at our Capitol Hill home a cocktail reception the night prior to the launch. The reception will be on November 3rd at our home at 628 East Capitol Street, NE from 6 30 to 8 00 pm. In attendance will be the panelists, staff of Common Sense Media from San Francisco, our Washington Advisory Council and various thought leaders in the area of kids, education and media. For those on the Washington Advisory Council, this reception will be in lieu of our fall meeting. I would really love it if you could especially stop by this event at the house and pick up some materials related to this study and also to meet again our CSM team. I have attached both invitations with all the key details, and I thank you again for your continued friendship and support.

If you should desire further information, please do not hesitate to contact my assistant, Carey Snyder. She can be reached at carey@delaneyoffice.com or by telephone at 203-561-6731.

Warmly,

April

John,

Joe Conason was kind enough to share your email with me.

It was very nice to see you again in Rome. The Newsmax delegation was very appreciative of the hospitality of Ambassador Hackett and the administration's delegation.

I mentioned to you that I would be happy to help, if there was some shared ground, on the immigration issue.

I recently wrote a column supporting Jeb Bush's view on some of this.

You can see that here: <http://nws.mx/1ii7ABr>

This coming June 23 I will be in Washington during that week. If you are free at any point I would be glad to visit with you. Otherwise perhaps some other time I work. I get into DC every month.

Thank you.

Best,

Chris

Hi Eryn and Milia,

Thanks so much to both of you for your kind help. Would you be so kind to share this message with John, please?

Thank you.

Best,

Jorge

Dear John,

It is always great seeing you. I really appreciate that every time I visit the US we can get together.

As I mentioned I am sending this message as a reminder of the topics we touched: Stan Greenberg in Argentina, David Miliband and cannot remember the name of the Italian lady that was a Minister of Prodi's administration.

Regarding the Nevada election and Dem. National Convention, I will contact you closer to those dates.

As always, thanks a lot!

Best,

Jorge

Subject: [big campaign] Obama's Gitmo Decision Keeps America Safe While Conservatives Politicize National Security

Obama's Gitmo Decision Keeps America Safe While Conservatives Politicize National Security

Washington, D.C. - Today, the Obama administration will announce an important step towards closing the detention center at Guantanamo Bay. Dozens of terrorism suspects currently held at the prison on the U.S. naval base are set to be transferred to a prison in Thomson, Illinois. When retrofitted, the Thomson Correctional Center will have the same, if not greater, enhanced security capabilities as the several other prisons on American soil that currently hold terrorists. Local leaders, residents, former Guantanamo Bay prison guards and prosecutors as well as the nation's largest prison guard union have endorsed the plan and the economic and national security enhancements it will provide. There is clear support for and confidence in the prison system's ability to hold the prisoners coupled with the anticipation of jobs and federal money that will come with the transfer.

While the administration seeks practical solutions to serious issues, many conservatives have simply gone on the attack, politicizing this national security decision. Their incoherent arguments have amounted to little more than obstruction, without any meaningful contributions to the debate or solutions of their own. The political fight conservatives are waging comes to the detriment of our national security, and feeds into the extremist agenda our enemies thrive upon. In the end, these conservative arguments have more to do with perpetuating their political agenda rather than protecting Americans. Guantanamo Bay and the abuses that it has come to represent has become a rallying cry for al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations. If this facility stays open it is a victory for al Qaeda. The Obama administration and America must continue on the path to closing the infamous facility.

Detainees to be transferred to Thomson, Illinois - Illinois residents, local citizens and leaders welcome arrival.

The prison, which will be retrofitted for superior security has received wide support from local leaders who have confidence in the American prison system that currently houses terrorists and other dangerous criminals. CNN reports that, "The governor and other officials have said such a deal could provide up to 2,000 jobs and up to $1 billion in federal money to the area. [Sen. Dick] Durbin, the Senate's second-ranking Democrat, has spoken positively of the plan." A recent letter signed by a former congressman and two former U.S. Attorneys from the district that houses the Thomson prison reads, "'We write to support the use of federal and state prisons, including the one at Thomson, IL, to house Guantanamo detainees pre-trial and post-conviction... we strongly reject charges that our country's prisons cannot securely hold terrorism suspects or other dangerous individuals. In fact, these facilities have proven their ability to do just that; they currently hold approximately 195 individuals convicted of terrorism offenses in our federal courts.'" Additionally, residents of Thomson do not seem to fear the idea of terrorists housed in their prison, in fact, they welcome the jobs and federal money that come with them. "Merrie Jo [Paullie], said she was firmly behind turning over the prison... 'We need the jobs,' Ms. Pauley, 64, who was village president here for 27 years, said ... The notion that a terrorism suspect could slip away into Thomson without being noticed was unimaginable to Ms. Pauley, who added, 'If a stranger comes around here, everyone knows within 20 minutes, believe me,'" reports the New York Times.

Another local resident was able to provide a unique perspective. Chris Sivright a member of the 339th Military Police Company of the Army Reserves, which was stationed guarding prisoners at the Guantanamo Bay prison -fully supports the plan saying that the Thomson prison is a more secure location than the detention centers at Guantanamo Bay. "Sivright, a Clinton County Sheriff's deputy, is not concerned about safety if the detainees are moved to the nearby prison. He sees a lot more positives than negatives in the idea. 'The State of Illinois is having some money problems. With the economy the way it is, I think it would be good for Thomson,' said Sivright, who is still a member of the 339th but expects to retire from military service in another year. 'I don't know what it's like at Gitmo now, but from when we were there, I think the prison is in much better shape,' he said. 'They're going to stay inside, for the most part,.. And I think it would be great for Thomson.'" reports the Quad-City Times. Washington Post, [12/15/09 . CNN, 12/15/09 . Abner J. Mikva, Thomas P. Sullivan and Dan K. Conservatives erupt over moves to hold terrorists in U.S., politicizing national security and besmirching our criminal justice system. Conservatives have been all over the map since the news first broke that the Obama administration was considering transferring detainees to Thomson, Illinois in order to bring about the closing of the facility at Guantanamo Bay. As reported in the New York Times, Rep. Mark Kirk, a conservative contender for the U.S. Senate initially joined with Rep. Don Manzullo to declare: "[a]s home to America's tallest building, we should not invite Al Qaeda to make Illinois its No. 1 target." Since then, Kirk has been all over the place. According to the Chicago Tribune, he scaled back his opposition, wanting more information before making a decision. But his campaign's petition to Obama reads, "If your Administration brings Al Qaeda terrorists to Illinois, our state and the Chicago Metropolitan Area will become ground zero for Jihadist terrorist plots, recruitment and radicalization," noticed Ben Smith at Politico. Other Illinois conservatives have continued to beat the drum. "Manzullo said he was concerned that Thomson would house the largest collection of terrorists within the U.S.," reported the Chicago Breaking News. In a forum in Springfield Illinois, State Sen. Kirk Dillard stated, "I think Al-Qaeda needs to stay in Cuba," while former Attorney General Jim Ryan said, "No one can tell me there isn't some risk to bringing such a high-profile terrorist to Illinois that we can't attract some sleeper cells."

In fact, conservative outcry over the decision is utterly baseless. The U.S. has a stellar record of safely keeping hardened terrorists behind bars, a reality which exposes GOP positioning on this issue as craven politicization.

Union for Federal Prison Officers: We welcome transfer of Guantanamo detainees to Thomson. When it was first hinted that the government would detain terrorist suspects in Thomson, the American Federation of Government Employees' (AFGE) Council of Prison Locals (CPL) released a statement saying: "We fully support housing Guantanamo Bay detainees at the Thomson Correctional Center... Furthermore, we do not see a safety risk to the surrounding community. Our correctional officers are the best-trained, most-qualified candidates in the world for this job. We have no doubt BOP correctional officers are up to the task." AFGE Statement, via Human Rights First, [11/18/09]

2007 60 Minutes Report: Terrorists "spend up to 23 hours a day in their cells." In 2007, 60 Minutes reported on the Supermax federal prison in Florence, Colorado, which holds dozens of terrorists who were convicted in civilian court, including: Zacarias Moussaoui, the alleged "20th hijacker" in the September 11, 2001 attacks; Ramzi Yusef and Omar Abdel-Rahman, convicted for masterminding the first World Trade Center attack; and Richard Reid, the so-called shoe bomber. According to the former warden there, "Most prisoners spend up to 23 hours a day in their cells, every minute, every meal." 60 Minutes,[8/14/07 ]

Representative Jan Schakowsky: GOP "absolutely politicizing the situation." The Washington Post reported: "Representative Jan Schakowsky, Democrat of Illinois, who along with the state's senior Democratic leadership supports the prison deal, dismisses GOP opposition as 'politics at its worst.' 'We can defeat Republican efforts to stop this,' said Schakowsky, who contends the GOP is 'absolutely politicizing the situation. They're looking for any angle that would make the president somehow look soft on terrorists. Fear, in the past, has been their friend.'" Washington Post, [12/07/09 ]

Top Illinois legal professionals: End "fear-mongering" over steps to close Guantanamo. Abner J. Mikva, former Illinois member of Congress and former federal judge, Thomas P. Sullivan, former U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, and Dan K. Webb, also a former U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois joined a Constitution Project letter, urging "the elected officials of Illinois to reject the irresponsible fear-mongering and partisan politics that have bogged down the inevitable, and necessary, closing of Guantanamo." The Constitution Project, [11/30/09 ]

NY Times, [11/16/09 . Chicago Tribune, 11/24/09 . Politico, 12/15/09 . Chicago Breaking News, 12/02/09 . The State Journal-Register, 12/14/09 ]

Closing Guantanamo is vital for U.S. national security. A senior administration official explained to ABC News the national security implications of closing Guantanamo: "Closing the detention center at Guantanamo is essential to protecting our national security and helping our troops by removing a deadly recruiting tool from the hands of al Qaeda...Tomorrow's announcement is an important step forward as we work to achieve our national security objectives."

Former Secretaries of State, military leaders, and national security experts all agree that closing Guantanamo is essential for regaining moral credibility, and protecting Americans:

Former Secretaries of State Kissinger, Albright, Powell, Baker, and Christopher all agreed that closing Guantanamo Bay is vital for repairing the damage it has caused to America's image. As James Baker, Secretary of State for George H.W. Bush, said forcefully: "Close Guantanamo. We were on a panel together several months ago, and we all agreed, one of the best things that could happen would be to close Guantanamo, which is a very serious blot upon our reputation." CNN, [9/20/08 ]

General David Petraeus has also said, "With respect to Guantanamo, I think that the closure in a responsible manner, obviously one that is certainly being worked out now by the Department of Justice -- I talked to the attorney general the other day [and] they have a very intensive effort ongoing to determine, indeed, what to do with the detainees who are left, how to deal with them in a legal way, and if continued incarceration is necessary -- again, how to take that forward. But doing that in a responsible manner, I think, sends an important message to the world, as does the commitment of the United States to observe the Geneva Convention when it comes to the treatment of detainees." General David Petraeus, via Radio Free Europe, [5/24/09 ]

Matthew Alexander - the pseudonym of the retired Air Force major and interrogator who located the notorious terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi by using conventional interrogation methods -has said that Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo were the main reasons fighters came to Iraq to attack Americans: "I listened time and time again to foreign fighters, and Sunni Iraqis, state that the number one reason they had decided to pick up arms and join Al Qaeda was the abuses at Abu Ghraib and the authorized torture and abuse at Guantanamo Bay... Consequently it is clear that at least hundreds but more likely thousands of American lives (not to count Iraqi civilian deaths) are linked directly to the policy decision to introduce the torture and abuse of prisoners as accepted tactics." Matthew Alexander, via Harper's Magazine, [12/18/08]

Navy General Counsel Alberto Mora testified before Congress that the stain on America's image caused by Guantanamo Bay led directly to American deaths: "Serving U.S. flag-rank officers... maintain that the first and second identifiable causes of U.S. combat deaths in Iraq - as judged by their effectiveness in recruiting insurgent fighters into combat - are, respectively the symbols of Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo." Subject: For comment: Equitable Growth's 2015 Request for Proposals

Attachments: Final Draft_2015 Equitable Growth RFP.pdf

Dear Steering Committee Members,

I am please to share with you the draft of Equitable Growth's 2015 Request for Proposals for your review (attached).

As you'll see, the research areas of interest are the same as last year's, although the specific language has been edited to reflect what we've learned over the past year. Over the past three months, Equitable Growth staff have conducted a robust outreach effort to learn more about the reaction to our first RFP. Combined, we solicited feedback from over four dozen stakeholders – mainly economists, but also academics from other disciplines, government officials, policymakers, think tank scholars, and grants administrators.

I welcome your feedback on the RFP. Please provide any comments or thoughts you to me by Monday, November 10th. I would be happy to talk over the phone if that would be easier for you.

We plan to announce the 2015 Request for Proposals on Monday, November 17. Letters of Inquiry will be due on February 1, 2015, which puts us on track to adhere to last year's timeline and announce our next cohort of grantees in June, 2015.

Thank you for your continued support of Equitable Growth. I look forward to hearing your thoughts on this year's RFP.

Best,
Heather

Could change the end and make this two graf.

It may be inconvenient for the Sanders campaign that Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus, but it's the truth. In last night's debate Senator Sanders himself even said this was being blown out of proportion. I hope he passes that message along to his staff.

Eight years ago Hillary came in third here in Iowa and when she did, she congratulated the winner. We suggest Senator Sanders do the same.

Draft Medium Post on Iowa

There's been even more bluster than usual from the Sanders campaign, this time in an effort to disqualify Hillary Clinton's historic victory in Monday night's Iowa caucus.

Disparaging good news for Hillary Clinton has become a pattern for the Sanders camp. It you support someone else? You're dismissed as part of the "establishment," unless of course they want to claim your support in ads anyways. If a process doesn't go their way? It's invalid or flawed or they blame the lowans who ran it.

In Iowa, the Sanders camp started floating conspiracy theories leading up to the caucus. First, it was two weeks ago when they posited that Microsoft might steal the caucus from them. Now that the caucus is over, they are calling into question the results that were reported by everyday lowans.

Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus with incredibly high turnout - a level of turnout the Sanders camp claimed would earn them a win. It was a close contest and a hard fought campaign. But Hillary won. And once it became apparent that they had lost, the Bernie Sanders campaign began to peddle frivolous claims that have been disproven in an effort to poison an otherwise historic night for Hillary Clinton, our supporters, and volunteers.

Remember coin flip-gate where people claimed Hillary won all the coin tosses? Turns out that wasn't true. In fact, according to the official count, Sen. Sanders won more coin tosses than Hillary Clinton.

Or how about the "90 precincts" with no chairs? Also untrue. Certainly there were precincts that took a while to report but once they all did, it was clear Hillary had won.

Now the Sanders campaign is disputing the reported results that were sent in by everyday lowans - volunteers, no less! - to the Democratic Party. All three campaigns have checked the results of certain precincts against their own data reported to them from volunteers. That's normal. For the Sanders campaign's challenges, there are 7 total precincts they are questioning (out of a whopping total 1,681 precincts!) and the Iowa Democratic Party is checking the results on a few more. And they will follow the same standard procedure for these questions as they did for precincts we asked them to look at - they'll look at the numbers reported that night, check the math and figure out if there are any discrepancies or misallocation of delegates.

Here's the kicker. Even if the Sanders campaign were to win all of their challenges - the marginal bump they receive in support would not be enough to overcome Hillary Clinton's win margin. Those are just the facts.

Here's the math.

Total Precincts in Contest: 11 (7 from Sanders and 4 from the Iowa Democratic Party)
Total State Delegates being Contested: 1.7947 (not enough to change outcome)

If every contest were to go in the favor of Sanders:
HRC = -.775
Sanders = +.758
MOM = +.0166

It may be inconvenient for the Sanders campaign that Hillary Clinton won the Iowa caucus, but it's the truth. Eight years ago Hillary came in third here in Iowa and when she did, she congratulated the winner. We suggest Senator Sanders do the same.

First, Kathy Obradabadf;ljaksd from the DMR is writing a column on this to run either tomorrow or Sunday (we should have IDP push to have it run tomorrow) but that will give good ammo. We also need to push the IDP to release the below

Total Precincts in Contest: 11 (7 from Sanders and 7 from Chairs)
Total State Delegates being Contested: 1.7947 (not enough to change outcome)

If every contest were to go in the favor of Sanders:
HRC = -.775

I just told her about them calling for an audit and Sanders campaign saying that they are looking at some inconsistencies.

She is very upset about it – convinced they will try to take the victory away from her and wear the party down. She wants a big effort to fight here.

Dear Colleagues,

Today, Monday, December 2, Richard Ekins of Oxford University will present his paper, "Statutory Interpretation and the Separation of Powers," at 3:30pm in the Hotung Dining Room. Ekins's paper engages the work of our own Vic Nourse--and this promises to be a very interesting discussion.

A copy of the paper is attached. We hope to see you there!

SDG UNGA meeting will be kicked off by Pope Francis on Friday 9/25 and last through the weekend until 9/27. I think POTUS isn't up there till evening of 9/27 or 9/28. What about doing an op-Ed from POTUS timed for the weekend that lifts up SDG's and the idea that we can end extreme poverty by 2030, if countries pay attention to gender equity, governance, peace and security, etc. I could send an outline if there is any appetite.

GARCETTI SHOWS STRENGTH WITH $2.207 MILLION RAISED
$1.145 Million Raised During Last Fundraising Period

LOS ANGELES – Demonstrating citywide momentum behind his candidacy, Eric Garcetti's campaign for Mayor today announced it has raised a total of $2.207 million.

"I am excited to see so many people rallying around our campaign to leverage new ideas and practical solutions to make L.A. great again," Garcetti said. "Together, we're going to get our city back to work and make City Hall work again to build strong neighborhoods and a strong Los Angeles."

Noting that fundraising is the clearest measure of a campaign's strength at this stage in the race, Garcetti strategist Bill Carrick said: "Our numbers reflect the momentum and discipline of our campaign and make it clear that we will have the resources it takes to win."

The numbers released today were calculated for city-required reports that detail fundraising between January 1 and June 30. During that period, Garcetti's campaign raised $1.145 million.

Garcetti's campaign is building a broad base of supporters from all 15 Council Districts and all walks of life including neighborhood activists, small business owners, retirees, parents, students, cutting-edge entrepreneurs and environmental advocates.

Subject: Stand with Bill

John,

Wow. Mitt Romney is terrified right now.

The RNC's most memorable speech was a nonsensical ramble addressed to an empty chair. Meanwhile, President Clinton just nailed it. He was talking to us and the message was clear: fight for what really matters in this election.

As a former advisor to President Clinton in the White House, I've seen him deliver a lot of fantastic speeches, but none that fired me up like the one I just watched. He challenged all of us to embrace the values that define us as Democrats. He challenged us to be proud of our accomplishments, not run from them. You know what? He's right.

STAND WITH BILL SHOW HIM WE'RE READY TO FIGHT!

ADD YOUR NAME

Let's show the President that we got the message. Join me in saying: we're with you Bill, and we'll fight for it.

Working families are struggling more than ever to stay afloat, and, as if that weren't enough, they're facing Republican- and Tea Party-led attacks on Medicare and education.

I stood with Bill in the White House when we created millions of jobs, protected Medicare by asking wealthier Americans to pay their fair share, and oversaw huge economic growth for working families. It's a common-sense approach, and Bill knows that's what I'll bring back to Congress. That's why he endorsed me. And that's why we're going to win if we all stand together.

With stakes higher than they've ever been, we have to fight. Join me.

Cheryl: FYI. I got fed-up, and I sent the following note to the Hillary campaign tonight. I guess that I just need to figure-out how to route their entreaties to "Trash" in my G-mail. I'm giving her my money, but they just don't stop, and they never even say "Thanks". My own political career would have died on the doorstep if I had practiced these oppressive kind of campaign practices.

Again, just FYI.

Thanks, and love to you all.

XOXO, Haller.

"Madame Secretary/Senator: I wholeheartedly support your campaign. I've put my money where my mouth is -- twice. Not at your request, but upon my own initiative. I'm happy to contribute to you further as your campaign progresses, just as I am contributing to good Democrats like Glenn Ivey and Chris Van Hollen in their own congressional and senatorial campaigns in Maryland. They send me campaign communications once every couple of weeks, but your more-than 20 pleas for even more additional contributions in the space of less than 72 hours is absurd, annoying, and unworthy of you.

Please moderate it. If you are able to appreciate that these incessant pleas are -- more than anything -- flat-out annoying, and a supreme turn-off to voters who might otherwise support you, I hope that you might ask your friends to stifle things a bit.

Thank you.

JFH.

P.S.: I've twice requested a button, bumper-sticker, or even a XXL t-shirt to display for you. Any chance of ever seeing them?"

Subject: Secretary Clinton's Foundation Work Update

Hi everyone-

Happy Monday. 2015 is off to strong start for Secretary Clinton's on-going work at the Clinton Foundation so I wanted to share a few updates on our programs Too Small to Fail, No Ceilings, and Job One:

Too Small to Fail

On January 21, Too Small to Fail and Sesame Street launched a new text-to-parents program in partnership with the free mobile health information service, Text4baby. This is the first national partnership to use text messaging to deliver tips on early language development to parents of infants.

- Read more about the partnership and watch a very cute conversation between Chelsea Clinton and Elmo from Sesame Street about the importance of talking, reading and singing at People HERE .
- You can also read more about Text4baby campaign in an editorial written by Too Small to Fail co-directors Ann O'Leary and Patti Miller HERE .

In January, Too Small to Fail began implementing its strategy to reach parents in Oakland, California, through its partnership with UCSF Benioff Children's Hospital Oakland. You can read more about this program HERE .

Chelsea Clinton Shares Her Mommy Routines with Baby Charlotte , People Magazine, January 21, 2015

No Ceilings: The Full Participation Project

No Ceilings is finalizing its Full Participation Report and online data visualization that Secretary Clinton, Melinda Gates, and Chelsea Clinton will launch at an event on Monday, March 9 in New York City. In partnership with the Gates Foundation, No Ceilings has collected over 1.8 million data points, from across 12 issue areas and over 190 countries, to share an accessible look at the status of women and girls over the last 20 years, and we look forward to sharing our findings and with you in late February.

No Ceilings partnered with Cosmopolitan magazine for its January 2015 edition. In a spread introduced by Chelsea Clinton, Cosmopolitan shared the stories of women around the world who are working to achieve full participation for women and girls in their communities. You can read their stories and Chelsea's introduction HERE .

In the news:

8 Incredible Women Who Will Inspire You to Break the Rules . Cosmopolitan, December 9, 2014

Job One

- Job One continues to gather momentum in 2015. At the 2015 Hope Global Forum in Atlanta, Madhuri Kommareddi was invited to speak about Job One's successes in the private sector to create new economic opportunity for unemployed U.S. youth, and President Clinton also discussed Job One during his Forum keynote address. Both events were livestreamed on MSNBC.com, and had a live audience of nearly 2,000 people. Job One is continuing to engage with companies through the CGI Action Network on U.S. Youth Employment. Later this month, Job One will host a meeting on innovative youth employment solutions with General Assembly, a New York based technology training company, with top New York City tech and innovation leaders.

As always, please don't hesitate to reach out with any feedback or new ideas. Input is much appreciated!

John,

I'm so glad you liked the CCDD video, I had a really fun time writing it and am thrilled it blew you up on twitter.

On a slightly different note, I read that Hillary's digital campaign team is hiring, which sparked my interest. I think there is so much that can be done for Hillary through comedy and would love to share some ideas I have with your campaign team.

The internet is a forever changing beast, as I'm sure you know. My goal has always been not only to make people laugh, but to get them to think in the process, which is why I am no longer at Funnyordie full-time.

I continue to work with FOD on a project to project basis and am also working with Jill Soloway's Wifey TV. Jill, the creator of Transparent on Amazon, was just named one of Time's top 100 most influential people and is all about women's empowerment through comedy.

Through my experience and connections with Funnyordie, Wifey TV and my general love of making fun of Republicans, I feel as though I could be a good fit for the Hillary campaign, depending on its needs.

If anything, I will start a campaign to get Rubio to open up a Rubio's franchise instead of running for president. That is my campaign promise.

Hope all is well and I look forward to speaking with you.

Best,

On Eve of the Fifth Anniversary of President's 'Mission Accomplished' in Iraq Speech, National Security Experts, Anti-War Advocates, to Discuss Situation in Iraq, Reflect Upon Enormous Cost of the War in Lives and Treasure and to the Nation's Security Since May 1, 2003

Call-In#: 888-325-3989, Passcode: 585071

"Admiral Kelly, Captain Card, officers and sailors of the USS Abraham Lincoln, my fellow Americans, major combat operations in Iraq have ended. In the battle of Iraq, the United States and our allies have prevailed" – President George W. Bush, USS Abraham Lincoln, May 1, 2003

Washington D.C. -- On the eve of the fifth anniversary of President Bush's "Mission Accomplished" in Iraq speech delivered on the USS Abraham Lincoln on May 1, 2003, national security experts and anti-war advocates will hold a press conference call on Wednesday, April 30th at 11:00 A.M. ET to discuss the situation in Iraq and reflect on the enormous cost of the war in American lives and treasure and to the nation's security since the President declared major combat operations had ended. In addition, MoveOn.org Political Action, a leading member of the Iraq Campaign 2008, will make a major announcement on the call and the Iraq Campaign 2008 will announce activities being held across the country on May 1st, including a flagship event outside the White House.

*See below statistics: since President Bush declared mission accomplished five years ago, nearly 4,000 American soldiers have lost their lives, nearly 30,000 have been wounded, and nearly half a trillion dollars has been spent. The war has cost more than 10 times what President Bush had predicted and, without an end-game strategy, could cost our country $3 trillion, according to Nobel Prize winning economist Joseph Stiglitz. Meanwhile, the Iraqis have a multibillion-dollar surplus that they have not spent.

WHO: Lt. Gen. Robert Gard, USA Ret.

Brian Katulis -- Senior Fellow, Center for American Progress Action Fund

Jon Soltz -- Co-Founder and Chair of VoteVets.org

Eli Pariser -- Executive Director, MoveOn.org Political Action

Tom Swan -- Campaign Manager, Iraq Campaign 2008

Subject: George Kaiser and Solyndra

Should groups (both enviro and other) ought to be doing an organized pushback on this?

I haven't followed this closely, and don't pretend to be in command of all the facts (or for that matter to know what y'all or others are already doing) so tell me if I'm just showing my ignorance . . .

Unless there is evidence that Kaiser himself weighed in with the White House, or that the White House handled it differently than they otherwise would have because of Kaiser's involvement, this is just a smear campaign.

The misleading headline below is followed by text that only says he advised his colleagues on their advocacy for the loan — not that he did any directly or that the White House was influenced by his involvement. (The link doesn't go to any more detail, and I don't have time to search for more.)

Thoughts on this?

Obama bundler was involved in effort to lobby White House, seek loan for solar company Solyndra

Obama fundraiser George Kaiser advised his business associates as they lobbied the White House to help solar company Solyndra sell its solar panels and win other government contracts, newly released emails show.

Records made public today by House Republicans show Kaiser’s associates were interested in winning White House assistance in selling its panels to the government, and that they discussed Solyndra with Obama administration officials in charge of stimulus funding. At one point, the messages refer to Solyndra as “prime poster children” of the stimulus program. Kaiser, who is linked to funds that held investments in Solyndra, has previously denied any involvement in the lobbying efforts.

Subject: [big campaign] Extreme Makeover: House Edition-Overview Of House Committee Chairmen In A GOP-Controlled 112th Congress

REPORT: Overview Of House Committee Chairmen In A GOP-Controlled 112th Congress

With less than two months until the midterm elections, all eyes are on what a Speaker Boehner would look like if Republicans take back the House. Just as important, though, are those GOPers who would head the House committees. Republicans have vowed that House committee chairmen like these will see their power increase if their party returns to power. With that in mind, it's worth asking: Who are the House Republicans who would control national legislation in the 112th Congress?

A new report from ThinkProgress takes a closer look. The potential committee and subcommittee chairmen aren't your run-of-the-mill House Republicans. Rather, those who could be in charge of our nation's laws are the GOP's right-wing extremists. Of the 10 right-wing extremists we profiled, eight have voting scores of 95 percent or higher from the American Conservative Union, seven are stimulus hypocrites, four are members of the Tea Party Caucus, and one is even a birther.

Those would control the House committees and subcommittees also may include:

- A Judiciary chairman, Rep. Lamar Smith (R-TX), who has hinted at impeaching President Obama
- Rep. Jim Sensenbrenner (R-WI), who opposes the existence of the global warming committee he would chair
- The subcommittee that controls monetary policy would be headed by Rep. Ron Paul (R-TX), who has called paper money "nothing short of counterfeiting"
- Rep. Joe Barton (R-TX), who apologized to BP during the oil spill for a $20 billion "shakedown," would control national energy policy

Click here to download a pdf of our report.

Explore the profiles of these right-wing extremists and decide for yourself: do you want these men in charge come January 2011?

UPDATE In addition, eight of the ten committee chairmen we profiled are funded by the right-wing billionaire Koch Brothers.

Subject: Rove developing GOP outside groups

ROVE DEVELOPING OUTSIDE GROUPS TO HELP GOP THIS FALL

By Peter Stone

Publicly, Karl Rove is busy penning columns, appearing on television, giving speeches and writing a book, but the former White House political guru is spending time out of the limelight trying to nurture new independent political groups aiming to raise tens of millions of dollars to boost the entire Republican ticket in November. Six GOP consultants and lobbyists â€" with varying knowledge of Roveâ€™s activities â€" told National Journal that Rove has been working for a few months to help line up resources and devise strategies for spending that money to help his party keep the White House and stave off losses in the House and Senate. Rove has had regular chats with GOP operatives he has worked with in Washington, and several prominent Republican donors nationwide â€" including some billionaires who were active in similar groups during the 2004 election cycle.

â€œKarl is up to his eyeballs in this,â€ says one prominent GOP consultant who has met with Rove a few times this year. â€œTheyâ€™re trying to figure out who is going to do the presidential, who is going to do the Senate and who is going to do the House. Theyâ€™re trying to assign resources to maximize the dollars and minimize duplication. Karl has taken it over.â€ To be effective, he adds, they need to raise â€œat least $100 million,â€ a sum that is likely to be at least what similar Democratic outside groups will spend. Rove didnâ€™t return four phone calls in recent weeks seeking comment for this story.

Roveâ€™s Rolodex is expansive, and sources say he has been on the phone or meeting with old friends from Texas like oilman T. Boone Pickens and Las Vegas casino mogul Sheldon Adelson, who are expected to pony up millions of dollars this cycle to a few outside groups set up as either 527 or 501 (c) (4) entities. In the 2004 elections, two GOP 527 groups â€" Progress for America and Swift Boat Veterans for Truth â€" together spent over $60 million on television ads that were instrumental in boosting the re-election bid of President Bush.

One new group being cobbled together includes old associates of Rove from the lobbying and communications firm DCI Group, including Tom Synhorst. The firm was heavily involved in the two major 527s in 2004. So far this election cycle, the key GOP group to run ads has been Freedom's Watch which has relied almost entirely on the wealth of Adelson, the third richest man in the nation, whose worth has been pegged at $28 billion by Forbes magazine. After a few staff departures and some internal friction, the group recently hired Carl Forti, a veteran strategist at the National Republican Congressional Committee, and it is likely to focus increasingly on helping a few dozen House candidates and has the backing to potentially pour tens of millions into them.

Robby & John

I understand more debates are being added. I also sent the below to Charlie. Please have a look at the attached document.

As you know, we've been working with the DNC on a science and environmental forum and have good will and credibility.

In considering debates, we're pitching the attached CNN science & environmental debate moderated by Wolf Blitzer.

This debate will make history and contrast democrats with republicans in substantive ways that especially appeal to young people and suburban women swing voters, and that are different from all other debates.

All best

Just a few items:

1) Legal description of P-E office should be checked by Todd. (It is actually a 501 c-4 tax exempt corp).

2) Should postal lottery receipts be listed in CHAI para?

I think it might benefit clinton foundation to do so since we are grandfathering those contributions in and avoids second guessing.

3) Guistra initiative uses the term "primarily" with respect to $ raised. Are you raising $ beyond the 3 big hitters and their related entities?

4) Should health schools be healthy schools?

5) In cgi para a for should be from

6) Publication of donor names sounds like it would take place after confirmation. I would divide going forward from release of past donors and make clear that if confirmed foundation would disclose donors going forward. Past donors will be released before the end of 2008 following foundation attempts to notify.

7) I am happy to sign, but may look better if one of other cochairs signs.

Haven't caught up with Todd he may have some other points, but generally looks good.

Subject: Dinner with Congressman Scott Peters -- Thursday, September 17th Attachments: Scott Peters 09 17 15 Dinner Invite.pdf

Friends:

I hope you can join me later this month for a small dinner with Congressman Scott Peters, a good friend. The dinner will be held on Thursday, September 17th at 6:30 pm at Bistro Bis, in the Hotel George at 15 E Street NW.

Congressman Peters was one of only 28 House Democrats who voted for Trade Promotion Authority this summer, and he has been targeted by some of our fellow Democrats as a result. He deserves our strong support for his courageous vote.

I've known Scott since he was first elected to Congress in 2012, representing California's 52nd district (the San Diego area). He was re-elected in a close race last fall. Since entering Congress, he has been a courageous leader in the House not just on trade, but also on immigration and border and port infrastructure issues. Scott is also a longtime public servant, having served several terms on the San Diego City Council, including as City Council President, and subsequently as Commissioner of the Port of San Diego. He's a member of the New Democrat Coalition and the No Labels Caucus.

Subject: Facebook founder supports Keystone XL and Arctic drilling

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS

Hold on a sec, John.

Did we just hear that correctly?

Is the political group backed by Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg launching a seven-figure ad campaign that supports drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and building the risky Keystone XL tar sands pipeline?

This makes no sense, but it's true. And there's no way, as avid Facebook users, that we're gonna let him get away with this.

Tell Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg to ditch his dirty energy ads now. Sign our petition here >>

Zuckerberg has led a bunch of tech industry leaders in launching a political group called FWD.us, which is supposed to be focused on building support for immigration reform. But for their first big TV ads they have decided to run messages that applaud legislators for supporting the dangerous Keystone XL tar sands pipeline and pushing for drilling in the Arctic Refuge.

Seriously, what the heck are they thinking?

This is a group of people who understand the importance of technology, innovation, and science. They should be leading the fight on climate change and clean energy innovation, not bankrolling ads for dirty energy projects.

Let's put on the pressure to get these dirty energy ads off the air. Tell Zuckerberg: Pull these ads down now or we'll unfriend you >>

Facebook depends on the millions of users that come to it each day to share about their lives and their passions. A major part of their user base is made up of people who care about the environment like you and me.

We need to let Mark Zuckerberg know that he cannot disregard our environment and our future in his political work and think there will be no consequences. So please join us in taking action today.

Thanks,

Romney and Bain Capital

template_bas

A timeline of the GOP presidential hopeful's path to wealth.

December 17, 2007

Romney and Bain Capital

1978: Mitt Romney joins Bain & Co., a Boston-based management consulting group founded by William W. Bain Jr.

1984: Romney tapped by the company founder to lead a spin-off called Bain Capital, a venture capital and private equity group.

October 1997: Bain Capital launches the Sankaty group of U.S.-based debt hedge funds. To assist U.S. tax-exempt and foreign investors, Sankaty organizes a subsidiary in Bermuda called Sankaty High Yield Asset Investors Ltd.

February 1999: Romney takes a leave of absence from Bain Capital. Bain Capital at midyear has $5.5 billion in assets under management, including $2 billion in the Sankaty funds, according to an independent evaluation.

February 2001: Romney is listed in SEC documents as president and sole shareholder of the Sankaty company in Bermuda.

August 2001: Romney announces plans to retire from Bain Capital to run for governor of Massachusetts. Before he steps down, he invests in BCIP Associates III Cayman, a private equity fund organized in the Cayman Islands.

January 2003: He puts his financial holdings into a blind trust.

2003-2007: Romney's trustee continues to invest in the Cayman fund.

2006: The Cayman fund pays Romney more than $1 million in interest, dividends and capital gains. He retains a profit share in Bain Capital until 2009, as well as investments in more than 30 Bain funds.

2007: Bain Capital manages $60 billion in assets, including $23 billion in Sankaty funds.

The 12 K of Christmas, Georgetown tow path is Saturday Dec 12. We did that last year.

I might try to do both if I can wrangle back to back weekends in DC.

Washington DC – With only four days left for Congress to avoid defaulting on the nation's debt obligations, a new TV ad has hit the airwaves in eight states making clear that if the Social Security checks, Veterans' benefits and military pay that Americans are counting on are not in the mailbox come August 3rd, they will have only Republicans in Congress to thank. See script below for “Your Check” imploring Senator Dean Heller and seven House Republicans to stop holding the economy and interests of ordinary Americans hostage to protect big oil subsidies and tax breaks for millionaires, corporate jet owners, and companies that ship jobs overseas – an effort airing Friday through Monday, sponsored by American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME), Service Employees International Union (SEIU), National Education Association (NEA), and Americans United for Change.

Earlier this week, Speaker John Boehner admitted “a lot” of House Republicans are refusing to compromise on a debt ceiling deal in hopes the resulting economic “chaos” of default would force Democrats to support the so-called “Balanced Budget Amendment” – wildly out-of-touch and totally unrealistic legislation that “would require more extreme cuts to Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid than the Ryan Plan” and would literally rewrite the U.S. Constitution to safeguard subsidies for big oil companies or deficit-busting tax breaks for millionaires, corporate jet owners, and companies that ship American jobs overseas.

Gerald W. McEntee, President of the 1.6 million-member American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME): “Republican leaders need to get their priorities straight. They appear willing to throw the economy back into a tail spin and deny Social Security checks to seniors, benefits to veterans and care to sick children – all to save face with their corporate donors. Main Street has had enough.”

Mary Kay Henry, President of the 2.1 million-member Service Employees International Union (SEIU): “Speaker Boehner and House Republicans want to bring us to the brink of financial ruin to protect tax giveaways for corporations and millionaires, while gutting programs that provide vital services for the most vulnerable among us. As we get dangerously close to defaulting on our debt, there are no more excuses for Members of Congress. Simply put, it’s time to get this done. The stakes are too high to play a partisan game of chicken that could end with disastrous results for working families, seniors, veterans and children. This is both unacceptable and indefensible.”

John I. Wilson, Executive Director of the 3.2 million-member National Education Association: “There is a fundamental question before Congress. Will Congressional Republicans balance the budget on the backs of those least able to afford additional sacrifice? Will they cater to Wall Street and large corporate interests at the expense of America’s children, seniors and the middle class? Or will they put partisan politics aside to do what’s right for all Americans?”

Tom McMahon, Executive Director, Americans United for Change: “Speaker Boehner admits that many of his Republican colleagues are more than willing to derail the economy and withhold checks that millions of seniors, people with disabilities, veterans and military families are counting on unless tax breaks for millionaires and oil companies are permanently protected. This unprecedented recklessness is a sobering display of Tea Party governance in action.”

“The consequences of a Republican-caused default can not be overstated,” added McMahon. “The business, economic and financial communities all warn that default could crush our economy, cost hundreds of thousands of jobs and, ironically, would mean hundreds of billions of dollars in new debt and a tax increase on the American people because it would skyrocket interest and mortgage rates. Republicans have wasted enough time putting politics and wealthy special interests ahead of America’s seniors, veterans and military families – it’s now time to do the responsible thing and work with Democrats to avoid ruining the nation’s credit rating and economy. It’s time to end the three-ring circus that Republicans have manufactured in order to advance their extreme right-wing ideological agenda.”

SCRIPT: ‘Your Check’ TV :30

If Congress doesn’t act by Tuesday, America won’t be able to pay all of its bills.

Social Security checks, veterans benefits, military pay – all could be at risk – because Congressman XXXXX and Congressional Republicans want to protect tax breaks for millionaires, oil companies and corporate jets.

So if the check you... or your family... depends on... doesn’t arrive – thank Congressman XXXXX

Tell Congressman XXXXXX to stop holding the interests of ordinary Americans hostage.

Hi John (I see you are still on China time),

To answer you directly, a consistent, national disclosure would ensure that all consumers have basic information about their food and create a simpler regulatory environment for food manufacturers. FDA has the authority to compel such a disclosure.

However, state action will inevitably move us towards a national solution, albeit not as swiftly. Many companies will choose to comply with Vermont's GMO labeling law by changing their packaging for all 50 states, not simply for Vermont. 17 states are now considering legislating mandatory labeling and apparently there will now be a CA referendum again in 2016 with a stronger and better crafted proposal. As more states enact GMO labeling laws, the numbers of companies that choose to label for the national market will grow. In addition, more companies will work with us to craft a national solution — just like menu labeling for restaurants.

So, permitting states to continue to require GMO labeling is certainly an option and Secretary Clinton could stand for the principle that states have long held the right to require disclosure on food packages — a right enshrined in the preemption provisions of the NLEA (which only apply to the nutrition facts panel and the ingredient line, not the rest of the food package). States have used their power to compel everything from use-by and sell-by dates to grading for butter and maple syrup.

And though as you say, it is probably obvious, nothing less than mandatory labeling is going to ensure a level playing field for all manufacturers. While most complain about any new labeling requirements, every CEO I know prefers the certainty of a single national solution over a patchwork one. I lived through the food industry's endless protests against the NLEA (passed as you know during the Clinton Administration), but once it was in place, everyone has been happy and gone back to business as usual.

Let me know if you need more information.

Gary,

I guess it's probably obvious, but can you say a bit more about why national mandatory is preferable to no preemption? Discussing today with colleagues and will brief her before she sees you so you can discuss.

Hi John, as you requested, I am forwarding a memo that summarizes the state of play with the national GMO labeling debate as well as policy recommendations for Secretary Clinton. I have also attached an Executive Summary of the recent Mellman polling data. The full 60 page report is available if you'd like to receive it.

I had a very nice chat with Robby at yesterday's lunch and am cc'ing him as well.

Please don't hesitate to reach out to me if I can provide further information or clarification. As I explained to you on the phone, there is very clear and compelling USDA and USGS data demonstrating a strong likelihood of serious health and environmental threats due to the skyrocketing increases in herbicides associated with GMO usage. The most prolific of these compounds has now been found by the WHO to be "probably carcinogenic", and the USGS reports that 60-100% of Iowa rainwater contains them. Leading agronomists and public health scientists are extremely concerned that these trends are rapidly increasing. To me, this is the key reason why citizens need the right to know and therefore choose, but in the interest of brevity, I have spared you a summary of those data. As you will read, we believe that the Right to Know is a compelling and rational position even without the Secretary having to become conversant about the herbicide "treadmill", but I am happy to supply you with a brief on that problem if you wish.

I am looking forward to briefly discussing this matter with the Secretary when she visits our home on July 3rd. Until then, please let me know if and how I can be useful.

On a separate and related note, I have heard both you and Robby speak about Secretary Clinton's strong interest in promoting sustainable and clean industry and job growth. Needless to say, this is where my last 30 years have been focussed and I sit on many boards and invest in a great many sustainable food businesses. If I can be helpful in developing policy and talking points in the clean food and energy space, I am at your and her service.

WASHINGTON—NEA and the NEA Advocacy Fund today launched a new radio spot for U.S. Sen. Patty Murray that highlights her efforts to improve military pay and education benefits for veterans. The ad buy totals $400,000; the spot will air on radio stations in the western part of the state, including those in the Seattle market.

The radio ad for Sen. Murray is part of a new $15 million independent campaign to draw attention to education champions in key federal races across the country. The independent campaign will also include television ads and mailings to voters in certain states and congressional districts urging them to support pro-public education candidates.

"Veterans' issues are family issues, and family issues impact public school children," said Karen M. White, director of NEA's Campaigns and Elections Department. "Sen. Patty Murray understands our brave men and women in uniform deserve everything they and their families need to grow and prosper. She wants our vets to have the freedom to become anything they desire once their military service is complete—and that means we must make sure they have access to education and job placement. Sen. Murray knows education is the path to economic prosperity for veterans and this nation. That's why we're fighting to keep her on Capitol Hill."

The NEA Advocacy Fund is a national political action committee that funds independent political campaigns to elect pro-public education candidates to Congress and the presidency.

Hi John -

I'm sorry to come at you out of the blue like this, but I was wondering if you might be able to help me with a problem that I'm having.

Campaign staff are supposed to receive tickets to the Inaugural Swearing-In Ceremony, but because of a mistake my name was left off the list of Wisconsin campaign staff. I have followed the instructions from PIC and my state leadership and exchanged emails and phone calls with many people, but I am not making any progress and the deadline is tonight at 10:00pm.

Of course, I want to attend the Inauguration like all the other staff, but because of this oversight, I am afraid I might not have tickets.

If you could do anything to help or you have any ideas about who I should contact, I would greatly appreciate it.

Hope you're well!

Jennifer,

I'm headed to NYC on Monday for a series of meetings with the senior staff and an all staff call, the purpose of which is to reassure people, calm them down with respect to the audit, and let them know that until Bruce is able to return full time, I will serve as an advisor and senior resource to move forward program decisions and any management reforms that may result from the audit. The senior staff meeting is scheduled for 2:00 at the Water St HQ. Would you or Victoria have any interest in attending that to answer any questions concerning the nature and timing of the audit? You are probably seeing most of these people one on one, so it may not be necessary, but I thought it might be helpful to have them all hear the same thing at once.

Bruce,

Do you have any concerns proceeding this way. Any messages you want me to make sure I communicate?

Attachments: 1 - 2015-12-07 CWF-MI Mission investments to catalyze climate solutions.pdf

Dear ClimateWorks Board,

Attached please find a near-final draft report commissioned by the Packard, MacArthur, and ClimateWorks Foundation on the opportunities for mission investments, combined with grant making, to catalyze faster, deeper climate action. Please do not feel obliged to read this in full, but you may wish to scan this hot-off-the-press report before our board meeting on Wednesday. We will touch on the topic of mission investment in a brief discussion of several possibilities we are evaluating for enhancing our value proposition. This will be a follow up to our discussion of this topic in our September board meeting and will be part of the CEO update.

Stephen Linaweaver managed this project for ClimateWorks. We are grateful to our partners at the Packard and MacArthur Foundations for their partnership in this work, and to Redstone Strategies for conducting the assessment.

As always, please let me know if you have questions or comments. I look forward to seeing you all next week.

Best,
Charlotte

Bob Kafka 2:19pm Sep 2 Next week the focus is on the Convention. There are two deadlines. Sept 7th is the deadline for the Gov to ask for an extension of the appeal date. If they don't ask for an extension of the deadline to appeal the case to the Supreme Court they have till Sept 17th to file an appeal. Two things: 1. If you know any delegates in Charlotte that might go up to the Gov and say "Don't Appeal - Negotiate" that would send a message this of national concern
2. Bruce Darling of ADAPT is developing a call in day as well as other things we can do nationally so STAY TUNED.

FYI. We have spoken to national disability lawyers as well as lawyers from DoJ and there is total consensus on the damage that can be done if the case is appealed. Onward

Nancy Becker Kennedy 12:55pm Sep 2 OMG. This could unravel all we've fought for. What do you suggest we do, Bob?

Bob Kafka 12:18pm Sep 2 Facebook M.R., et.al. v. Dreyfus

An Olmstead Challenge to WA State's 10% Across the Board Personal Care Hours Reduction

The U.S. Supreme Court's landmark ruling in Olmstead v. L.C. , 527 U.S. 581 (1999), established that the unjustified institutional isolation of people with disabilities is a form of unlawful discrimination that violates the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Rehabilitation Act. That groundbreaking civil rights ruling has resulted in the deinstitutionalization of many thousands of individuals with disabilities, who now receive services in their homes instead of in nursing homes or other institutions as a result.

But Olmstead may be in jeopardy. States facing legal pressure to continue funding for community based programs may seek U.S. Supreme Court review of lower court decisions applying the Olmstead decision. Such review could result in the dramatic undermining, or even the complete evisceration, of the Olmstead ruling and its attendant protections for people with disabilities.

Specifically, in M.R. v. Dreyfus, Plaintiffs[1] brought an Olmstead suit challenging reductions to in-home personal care services for approximately 45,000 Medicaid recipients. The reductions, which were the result of a budget crisis facing Washington State, averaged 10%, with smaller percentage reductions for recipients with greater levels of disability and much larger percentage cuts for recipients who were identified as having fewer needs.

The Plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction on the ground that the 10% cut would violate the antidiscrimination provisions of the ADA and Rehabilitation Act by substantially increasing the risk that they would be institutionalized in order to receive care adequate to maintain their mental and physical health. The federal district court denied preliminary relief, but the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed and granted a preliminary injunction for the twelve individual named plaintiffs. The Ninth Circuit rejected the argument that individuals with disabilities must be already institutionalized in order to invoke the protections of the ADA, and held that a "serious risk" of unnecessary institutionalization is enough to obtain injunctive relief.

Washington state has indicated that it may seek U.S. Supreme Court review of this decision. In the lower courts, Washington argued that it would violate the U.S. Constitution for the ADA to prevent states from cutting services, even when those cuts will cause unnecessary institutionalization. But regardless of how narrowly or broadly Washington frames its challenge, Supreme Court review could put the Olmstead precedent in great jeopardy. In a number of recent cases, the Supreme Court has reached out to deliver far broader and more sweeping revisions of prior law than the parties actually sought or suggested, including reaching out to overturn or question major precedents.

Olmstead itself was a divided decision, and might not come out the same way if it were in front of the current Supreme Court. Moreover, since Olmstead, the conservative Supreme Court majority has narrowed, and in some cases even struck down as unconstitutional, many important civil rights protections, including provisions of the ADA. In particular, the Court has been hostile to Congress' authority to impose obligations upon states – most recently as shown in the Supreme Court decision striking down the Affordable Care Act's mandate that states receiving Medicaid funds expand Medicaid enrollment as part of national health care reform.

This Supreme Court's hostility toward civil rights protections and friendliness to state challenges to federal authority do not bode well for how an Olmstead case would come out today. Washington's certiorari petition would thus put at risk the major 20th Century landmark disability rights decision. Washington should not seek Supreme Court review.

Nancy Becker Kennedy12:04pm Sep 2Bob, can you flesh this out a bit for us re Karen's request for more background?

Karen Duncanwood11:56am Sep 2Thanks Nancy for forwarding this from Bob. But I don't really understand it. Seems he didn't give enough facts to understand what's going on. What is the case M.R. vs. Dreyfus? Who are those named? What is the case about? What's the legal history? Did it get decided one way in a lower court? Why? Did it get then appealed? By who? And the result (ruling of the appeal court) was?

Why might or might not the Gov. take it to the Supreme Court? And how is it linked to Olmstead? What freedom would we lose, why? How?

Please try to get him or you to state the facts & a brief history of the case. I get the sense of urgency he feels, but not why. He says "If you haven't heard about the litigation of M.R. vs. Dreyfus, don't feel bad - either did the vast majority of people in the disability and aging communities." And then he doesn't inform us. Kind of strange don't you think? Unless I totally missed something, or the case description has been around and I just missed it (if so, sorry). I am cc'ing this to the address listed for Bob too, so hopefully he can respond directly with information about this case. So we all know why he wants us to act. Thanks, Karen

Advocates:

If you haven't heard about the litigation M.R. vs Dreyfus don't feel bad - either did the vast majority of people in the disability and aging communities.

The legal issues are somewhat complicated however if the Governor of Washington State appeals the case to the Supreme Court, most legal experts in our Community believe Olmstead could be overturned.

YES OVERTURNED!

To say this is critical is an understatement!!

Did I mention that the Governor is a Democrat!!

She will be in North Carolina next week at the Democratic Convention.

She needs to hear from folks attending the Convention on the importance of Olmstead. Please read the Alert below and Act.

Subject: The most IMMEDIATE threat to Olmstead is a Democrat!

We are being attacked on ALL sides, but the most IMMEDIATE threat to Olmstead is a Democrat!

We need folks going to the Democratic National Convention to PERSONALLY urge Governor Gregoire to NOT to appeal MR v Dreyfus to the Supreme Court!

RIGHT NOW Governor Gregoire (Washington State) is deciding if she will appeal the MR v Dreyfus case to the Supreme Court. (She has until 9/17 if she doesn't ask for an extension by 9/7.) It's an ADA/Olmstead case and an appeal to the Supreme Court has widespread implications for Americans with disabilities around the country! Our civil rights and LITERALLY our freedom are at risk!

With the Democratic party's commitment to civil rights, which includes people with disabilities, the idea that a DEMOCRAT would take the lead in undoing our civil right to live in freedom is absolutely appalling. How would the Dems respond if she was attacking the Civil Rights Act or Title IX? Or appealing a case that could potentially overturn Brown v Board of Ed? We know other Dems are weighing in (everyone knows who they are and we THANK them), but we are also hearing that some, including Gov Brown of California, is pushing her to appeal.

The timing of this is striking! As a Dem delegate and Dem Gov, Gregoire is going to be at the Dem convention. With their rhetoric about being defenders of civil rights, do they realize how hypocritical this looks? Wouldn't the Dems rather let us focus on Romney and Ryan instead of painting huge targets on themselves right now?

We need folks who are going to the convention to PERSONALLY urge Governor Gregoire NOT to appeal MR v Dreyfus! Please share this and urge folks to use this opportunity!

IT'S TIME TO DEFEND OUR FREEDOM... or we will LOSE it!

On a slightly different note, I read that Hillary's digital campaign team is hiring, which sparked my interest. I think there is so much that can be done for Hillary through comedy and would love to share some ideas I have with your campaign team.

The internet is a forever changing beast, as I'm sure you know. My goal has always been not only to make people laugh, but to get them to think in the process, which is why I am no longer at Funnyordie full-time.

I continue to work with FOD on a project to project basis and am also working with Jill Soloway's Wifey TV. Jill, the creator of Transparent on Amazon, was just named one of Time's top 100 most influential people and is all about women's empowerment through comedy.

Through my experience and connections with Funnyordie, Wifey TV and my general love of making fun of Republicans, I feel as though I could be a good fit for the Hillary campaign, depending on its needs.

If anything, I will start a campaign to get Rubio to open up a Rubio's franchise instead of running for president. That is my campaign promise.

Hope all is well and I look forward to speaking with you.

Subject: Afghanistan

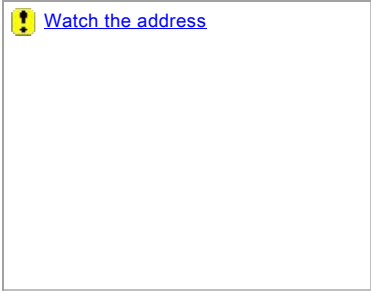

John --

Last night, President Obama laid out his plan to defend our national interest by refocusing our efforts on three clear goals: defeating al Qaeda, stabilizing Pakistan, and breaking the Taliban's momentum in Afghanistan.

To achieve these goals, the President has authorized the rapid deployment of 30,000 more troops in Afghanistan, with a firm commitment to begin bringing our troops home in 2011.

It's a clean break from the failed Afghanistan policy of the Bush administration, and a new, focused strategy that can succeed.

Please take a moment to watch the President's address to the nation and read more about his plan.

Our new strategy ends the era of blank checks for Afghanistan's leaders, facilitates a responsible transition to Afghan security forces, and begins bringing our troops home in 2011.

Please take a moment to listen to President Obama outline his plan -- and pass this along to anyone you know who wants to learn more:

New Advocacy Group "The UNRA" Offers Voice to Gun Owners Who Support Universal Background Checks and Rational Gun Laws

UNRA Launches With Powerful Video Observing 32nd Anniversary of President Reagan's Assassination Attempt and His Support for Background Checks That May Have Prevented It

VISIT: www.Facebook.com/TheUNRA

Gulf Shores, AL – Launching today, a new online advocacy group, "The UNRA," will offer gun owners who support universal background checks and other responsible gun violence prevention measures as a place to voice their opinions to Congress. "The UNRA" (United Network of Rational Americans) calls upon Congress to "protect our rights AND our children."

In its first action, UNRA today released a solemn video in observance of the 32nd anniversary of the assassination attempt of President Ronald Reagan that reminds today's Congressional Republicans opposed to tough, enforceable background checks for all gun sales that Reagan believed the nightmare he faced may have been avoided if background checks had been required by law in 1981. WATCH IT HERE: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?>

10/18/2016

v=I5ZULLbEwMY&feature=youtu.be

The UNRA was created by Watchdog Causes, LLC, the founders of "Dogs Against Romney ."

"As life-long Southern gun owners, we strongly support America's history of responsible gun ownership," said Watchdog Causes' founder Scott Crider. "Like most gun owners, we also believe universal background checks are a necessary step that will save lives and will in no way undermine the 2nd Amendment."

Groups like the NRA have failed to listen to their members, Crider said. "88% of the American people are behind universal background checks, including 74% of NRA members , but the NRA leadership is not. They aren't listening to their members. They're listening to the big gun manufacturers who only care about their bottom line and keeping the flow of increasingly more deadly, more expensive guns going into the marketplace – regardless of whose hands those guns fall into."

Universal background checks, if implemented, will close gaping loopholes in America's gun trade that enable criminals and people with dangerous mental disorders to easily obtain weapons and accessories, including military-style assault weapons and high-capacity magazines like those used to slaughter 20 innocent children and 6 educators at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, CT 100 days ago this week. We learned Thursday that the sick young shooter in Newtown was able to fire 154 rounds in under five minutes with these tools of mass destruction.

FACT: Background Checks Work. According to the Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence : "Since the Brady Law took effect in February 1994, more than 1.6 million prohibited gun buyers have been blocked from buying a gun from licensed gun dealers across America. Those prevented from buying guns have had felony records, domestic violence abuse histories, drug addictions, and mental illnesses that posed threats to others. A large number have been fugitives."

FACT: But the Private Sale Loophole Means 40% of Gun Sales Unacceptably Go Unchecked. According to FBI data: In the 38 states that have not fully closed the private sale loophole, an estimated 9,856,984 background checks were conducted between November 2011 and November 2012, out of an estimated 16.5 million total firearm transfers in those states. 40 percent of this total—6.6 million transfers—occurred without background checks.

"Closing the private gun sale loopholes is a no-brainer. Virtually everyone wants universal background checks, and it doesn't affect law abiding gun owners or undermine the 2nd Amendment," Crider said. "Hell, the NRA once supported it ."

The UNRA is free to join and can be found online at www.Facebook.com/TheUNRA

The group plans to provide a platform for gun owners and 2nd Amendment supporters to voice support for universal background checks to members of Congress. Events will be organized online, and on-the-ground, Crider said.

Subject: Breaking: massive cuts announced in Colorado. What now?

 ProgressNow Colorado C4 Logo

Dear Friend,

Here's a true or false question for you. Do you think Colorado is a great place to live? If you answered YES, then you can keep on reading this email. If you answered NO, well, we need to talk.

I'm assuming most of you answered YES. Colorado is a great place live. It's great because of the mountains and the climate and the beauty all around us. But it's also great because the people who came before us, invested in the things that make Colorado work: schools, roads, parks, jobs.

Right now, Colorado is at a crossroads. Just a few minutes ago, the governor announced the latest round of truly devastating cuts to next year's budget. Hundreds of millions more will be cut from K-12 education. More cuts to our colleges. Closing state parks. The state legislature has to find $1.2 billion, yes that's BILLION with a B, in either more money or cuts to balance this year's budget alone. That's on top of the $5 billion we've had to cover over the previous 3 years. The future we're facing is unsustainable. We aren't raising enough money to pay for the things that make Colorado work.

All the easy cuts have been made. There's real pain in the cuts ahead.

We must find a balanced approach to dealing with this pain. The options are clear. We can either continue to cut services or we can start to think about way to raise revenue. In Colorado, only the voters can choose this option. But we are going to have to make a decision .

We choose our path here in Colorado. But backward is not the way forward. Do we want a Colorado where we are forced to fire thousands of teachers from schools? Where we abandon making college accessible to all Coloradans? Where we ask seniors to pay more in property taxes? Where we sacrifice basic health care services?

It's time we start having the conversation about how to solve these problems. The decision we make will determine the kind of state we want Colorado to be, now and in the future.

If you answered YES to the question, "Do you think Colorado is a great place to live?" then I know you're going to want to join us in this conversation.

Click to here to sign up and join the conversation about Colorado's budget, and Colorado's future.

Past generations invested in Colorado to build the great state we live in today. It's up to us to make the decisions about what Colorado will look like tomorrow.

Thank you,
Jen Caltrider

Subject: [big campaign] Economists: Unemployment would have hit 10.8% without the stimulus

If Congressional Republicans had had their way and killed the President's economic recovery plan, 1.2 million Americans would be without jobs today...

http://www.usatoday.com/money/economy/2010-01-25-usa-today-economic-survey-obama-nulus\_N.htm

clusive: Obama stimulus reduced our pain, experts say

By Paul Wiseman and Barbara Hansen, USA TODAY

President Obama's stimulus package saved jobs — but the government still needs to do more to breathe life into the economy, according to USA TODAY's quarterly survey of 50 economists.

Unemployment would have hit 10.8% — higher than December's 10% rate — without Obama's $787 billion stimulus program, according to the economists' median estimate. The difference would translate into another 1.2 million lost jobs.

BUSINESS SURVEY: Slow recovery continues

RECOVERY WATCH: Tracking the economy; see VIDEO

JOBS OUTLOOK: Latest data for all states, 384 metros

But almost two-thirds of the economists said the government should do more to spur job growth. Suggestions included suspending payroll taxes for Social Security and Medicare, increasing spending on infrastructure, enacting a flat tax on income and extending jobless benefits.

The economists expect the jobless rate to remain in double digits until the third quarter.

David Berson, chief economist at PMI Group, worries that the housing market and the economy will suffer when the government's tax credit to first-time home buyers expires in April and the Fed stops supporting the housing market by purchasing mortgage-backed securities by March 31.

Bill Cheney, chief economist at John Hancock Financial Services, is relatively optimistic. He sees unemployment falling to 8.9% by the fourth quarter of this year. Cheney says other economists are "nervous Nellies," shell-shocked by the length and depth of this downturn. They've forgotten that "the deeper the recession, the faster you come out of it."

But Diane Swonk, chief economist at Mesirow Financial, says creating jobs is tougher than it was the last time unemployment passed 10% in the early '80s. The reason: The 1981-82 recession was engineered by the Federal Reserve to tame inflation through high interest rates. The Fed brought the economy back simply by reversing course and cutting rates.

This time, the Fed has pushed short-term rates to near zero and has flooded markets with money. But the financial system is so damaged by the Wall Street meltdown that it isn't converting easy money into loans and economic growth: "It's like the Fed is dropping money from a helicopter and it's getting caught in the trees," Swonk says.

The economists don't expect Fed chief Ben Bernanke to take his foot off the accelerator — and push rates up — until the third quarter. So they don't expect any change in the Fed's zero-interest-rate policy when its Open Market Committee meets Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Bernanke and his colleagues are very committed to doing the right thing," Cheney says. They learned from Japan's long 1990s slump, during which policymakers kept declaring premature victory and raising rates and taxes: "It's really important not to snuff out a recovery before it gets going."

Subject: Govr. Spitzer support for Derek Douglas

Eliot Spitzer just called John, to convey his support for Derek Douglas, who ran his DC office when he was govr., and has interviewed for a DPC job in the Urban Policy Unit - says he's stupendous, hard-working, great guy.

thx,

Subject: Elizabeth

Dear John,

I can't stop thinking about Elizabeth Warren's speech.

You could hear it in her voice and see it in her eyes: Elizabeth will never give up on the middle class. She'll be relentless in making sure everyone gets a fair shot.

For those reasons and more, she's the fighter I want alongside me in Washington. But right now, the polls show her tied and her opponent has a $2 million cash advantage.

To hold our majority in the Senate, we need to elect Elizabeth. That's why I'm asking you now to join me in making a direct contribution to her campaign. It has to be now so she can come out of the convention with a wave of momentum that will carry her to victory in November.

Rush \$5 or more to help elect Elizabeth Warren to the U.S. Senate. She's the middle-class champion we need in Washington.

Thanks,

Kirsten

Dear Sir,

Subject: Disentanglement from Afghanistan

I have been conducting a pertinacious correspondence with your Committee in latest four years trying exerting pressure on US Establishment that might have eventually got NATO Troops been pulled out of Afghanistan. According to TV Program dedicated to US Arsenal as many as 7000 UAV are being stored unused in Magazines instead of attacking targets in Afghanistan with the following emerging advantages:

- 1) Severing Terror Organizations' from their Financial Sources
- 2) Salvation of millions of potential Drug Addicts from awful agony and death.
- 3) Acceleration of Troops pulling out from Afghanistan due to Intensification of Aerial raids.
- 4) Restoration of US Deterrence as a result of UAV strengthening.

I believe in Terror Overwhelming defeat under those circumstances.

5) I remember UN 1946 Chapter 51 (self defense right that every country deserves) but being surprised by US failing of its Exercise in spite of its Technical Preponderance

6) Despite my Thorough UAV Special Version Design for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication even one word of Acknowledgement has not reached my mailbox hitherto.

7) Ignominious for a Super Power isn't it?

After further reflection and conversation with Scott, I wanted to let you know that I don't think it's the right for for me at this time.

But thanks again for thinking of me. And I will continue to do what I can to help on the outside.

Hope you enjoy the holidays with your family.

Subject: Peace Poetry - Middle East

PEACE POETRY

Religions are based on scripture, which is mostly poetry. So it only makes sense that religious conflict must be resolved through poetry, and not through politics, negotiation, or war. I propose that all religious conflicts be redefined poetically, so that they can be resolved without bloodshed, winners, or losers. So let's sharpen our pencils, not our swords; send missives, not missiles; and apply our minds to metaphor, simile, rhyme, meter, and prosody, but not pomposity, animosity, ferocity, atrocity, or monstrosity.

Best regards,
Hugh Mann

Please click the link above to access your mobile boarding pass(es). To quickly retrieve and display your mobile boarding pass, you should save the image on your mobile device.

Once at the airport, show this mobile boarding pass:

- at Curbside where available, Self-Service Kiosks or the American Airlines counter if you are checking baggage,
- at the security checkpoint,
- during the boarding of your flight.

If you forget your cell phone or mobile device, or delete the link to your boarding pass by mistake, you can print a paper boarding pass at a Self Service Machine or American Airlines Ticket Counter.

For your convenience, a paper boarding pass has also been attached to this email. If you have access to a printer, you can print your paper boarding pass(es) before proceeding to the airport. The attached document is not a mobile boarding pass and will not be accepted at the security checkpoint if displayed from your mobile device.

Thank you for choosing American Airlines.

Subject: Drugs and Terror Monster Conjugated Aggravation in the Middle East

SALVATION OF MANKIND BY NARCOTIC VEGETATION ERADICATION FROM THE AIR BY UNMANNED AIRCRAFT VEHICLES

Mr. President White House, Washington

Stop world Drug Inundation and Terror Conjugation .Simultaneously

Unmanned Aircraft Vehicles

Development proved being capable of hitting even point targets. It is well known that Afghanistan has World record of Poppy Opium Production of about 200 tons annually yielded from a cultivated 157,000 hectares area. That enormous dope amount (90% of world's opium production) is in my opinion the main financial source for Terror Organizations' Weaponry Acquisition. According to my assessment, UAV could have been Redemption for Entire Mankind if being utilized as follows: 2,4 D Defoliant is splashed on the Narcotic Vegetation by air causing its desertification within several days inevitably. The following favorable consequences might have been anticipated:

- 1) Severing of Terror Organizations from their Financial Source that dry up with Narcotic Vegetation Desertification
- 2) Salvation of millions of Potential Drug Addicts from Awful Agony and Death
- 3) Rehabilitation of US Deterrence that has weakened considerably after Nine Eleven Horrendousness
- 4) Precipitation of NATO Troops Evacuation from Afghanistan as a result of UAV Bombardment Intensification resulting in Terror Suppression Reinforcement
- 5) Deterrence of El-Qaida Reactivation by leaving a Souvenir of dry Poppy-Opium Bushes from pulling out NATO Troops
- 6) I suggest having a Debate in the Senate that might hopefully lead to successful termination of the Afghan War after being stuck in its Marsh for 12 long years
- 7) Waiting for your Response as US friend since 1948
- 8) There could not have been any doubt about terminating the Armed Conflict in Afghanistan Honorably averting an Ignominious ending up as currently impending.
- 9) Similarly, Central American Dope Smuggling could have been drastically diminished by UAV Utilization for Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Grown on Mountainous Gradients. Very large amounts of Dope are smuggled annually into the US having found hitherto no efficacious way of overcoming that calamity
- 10) Please contact me by scheduling a meeting at US Embassy in Tel -Aviv for Clarifications with your experts' participation specializing in Explosives, Electronics and Aviation
- 11) I have got all the required specifications for getting mankind be extricated from the two conjugated calamities, Drugs inundation and Terror attacks of Innocent Population thanks to UAV activities.
- 12) To my great astonishment, my correspondence versus US Senate Committee on Armed Services has been irresponsive despite the extraordinary importance for entire Civilization Meanwhile as many as one billion of Muslims are threatening America encouraged by their Nine Eleven Precedent Success
- 13) In reminiscence, as many as 50,000 Aircraft were ordered according to Presidents' Roosevelt Ordinance after the Japanese Attack of Pearl Harbor while 7000 UAV by comparison are being idled in Storage letting the Afghan Armed Conflict be continued indefinitely.
- 14) Please let me explicate for US Air-Force an efficacious way emerging victorious from Afghan Entanglement in favor of Entire Mankind instead of suffering an ignominious defeat.
- 15) To my great surprise, US Does not exercise its Self Defense Right according to UN Charter Chapter 51 (1946), enabling Criminal Organizations of Third World Countries attacking it with impunity. Nine Eleven Catastrophe could have been averted if the US had utilized its complete Arsenal particularly UAV in high numbers instead of being kept idle in Magazines.
- 16) I propose meeting your Experts for UAV, Explosives and Electronics at US Embassy in Tel Aviv for thorough debate about Dual Headed Monster Decapitation in favor of beleaguered Mankind believing in great success of my Innovative Unprecedented Method as an only feasible efficacious expedient against it.
- 17) Is White House Correspondence Team busy to such an extent being unable responding even most important letters?

10/18/2016

18) To my great Astonishment Dereliction of US Air Force results in smuggling of Tremendous Dope Amount from Central America via Mexico into the US with its Awful damage for many millions American's Health

19) I don't see any reason for hesitancy! The President may issue tomorrow an ordinance in order to open emergency Magazines, getting ten thousands of UAV

Aloft in order to achieve Narcotic Vegetation Desertification with achievement for Posterity

20) Emerge preferably with an Upper hand honorably instead of being ignominiously defeated!

21) Despite being Non US Citizen I think to have done my best in assisting ending up

Afghan War victoriously thanks to my Innovative Narcotic Vegetation Eradication Method, however not a single word of Acknowledgement has hitherto Reached my mailbox! In my opinion, Disparagement and Ungratefulness are conjugated at least according to my feeling!

22) There could not have been any justification keeping as many as 7000 UAV unused in magazines instead of operating them against Nine Eleven Cruel enemy. Moreover, US taxpayers have already paid for that arsenal!

23) I believe Mr. Attorney General that Narcotic Vegetation Desertification Utilizing UAV is the only Feasible way of getting Mankind been extricated from the Doubling Stricken Menace Grabbing, Drug and Terror Simultaneously.

24) November election is going to be beginning of President Obama last Congress Tenure working with but if the President is being able Indicating Monumental achievements. He might have been eligible into the Parlor of great Leaders having annihilated Drugs and Terror calamities for Posterity affluence

25) Wiping out Narcotic Vegetation and launching consequently an Overwhelming

Strike on Terror Organizations by UAV Utilization might have been an Unprecedented Achievement of Entire Mankind and President Obama personally.

26) Incredibly, no reaction has come from the White House in latest four years despite

My pure intention for assistance for the US as well as Entire Civilization!

27) In my opinion Nobel Institute might have contributed to a very great extent to Drug and Terror Monster Decapitation in favor of Entire Civilization.

28) Prime Minister of Israel might have contributed a great role in exerting an influence on US and Western Governments in General in a Universal Effort of Dual Headed Monster, Drugs and Terror simultaneous eradication

Be successful

Gideon Rodeh

There is no justification losing an Election Campaign Ignominiously instead of emerging Victorious honorably! The Democrats should have mobilized the entire US Media attacking the Republicans for an Exploitation of US Constituency to vote against their own Interests in favor of big Oil Corporations! Such incessant Transmissions would have been a very efficacious Deterrence for most Democratic families to abstain from voting against their own Interests! As to your repetitive donations requests you are asking for the impossible having no US Citizenship!

Recently, Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-VT) released the outline of a plan to move to a single-payer health care system in the U.S. along with proposed tax increases intended to pay for the overhaul. According to the Sanders campaign, the plan would cost roughly an additional $1.4 trillion per year, or $14 trillion over ten years, and it would be financed through a combination of taxes on workers, employers, investors, estates, and high earners.

Analysis of the Sanders Single-Payer Offsets
Key Findings

- Sen. Sanders deserves praise for proposing serious offsets
- But CRFB estimates those offsets would fall $3 trillion to $14 trillion short of the plan's cost
- This could drive debt to 100 to 150 percent of GDP in 2026
- Sen. Sanders's plan could also result in an 85 percent top tax rate — well above the revenue-maximizing rate

That Sen. Sanders has shown a commitment to paying for his new initiatives and has proposed specific concrete changes to do so is quite encouraging. However, by our rough estimates, his proposed offsets would cover only three-quarters of his claimed cost, leaving a $3 trillion shortfall over ten years. Even that discrepancy, though, assumes that the campaign's estimate of the cost of their single-payer plan is correct. An alternate analysis by respected health economist Kenneth Thorpe of Emory University finds a substantially higher cost, which would leave Sanders's plan $14 trillion short. The plan would also increase the top tax rate beyond the point where most economists believe it could continue generating more revenue and thus could result in even larger deficits as a result of slowed economic growth.

Below, we explain the plan – and more specifically the plan's offsets – in some detail.

The Basics of Sen. Sanders's Single-Payer Health Plan

Sen. Sanders's plan, which he calls Medicare-for-All, would expand health coverage to all Americans and make the federal government the sole health insurer in the country, responsible for paying providers (hence the term single-payer) and negotiating payment rates. Although it is framed as Medicare-for-All, this single-payer system would work differently than Medicare and in many ways would be far more generous since it would require no cost-sharing and offer a more comprehensive set of benefits, including long-term care and mental health and substance abuse services.

The Sanders campaign estimates this plan would save the health system on the whole about $6 trillion over ten years (an estimate many have argued is far too high), but it would increase the federal government's costs by about $14 trillion.

Encouragingly, Sen. Sanders has outlined a set of offsetting tax increases designed to pay for the plan's cost. They include:

- A 2.2 percent "income-related premium" for individuals – Under this policy, households would pay a 2.2 percent tax, which based on the description would be the equivalent of a 2.2 percentage point increase in all ordinary income tax rates. As with the ordinary income tax, significant earnings would be exempt from this tax, particularly for low and moderate earners. For example, a family of four taking the standard deduction would not pay taxes on their first $28,800 of income.
- A 6.2 percent employer-paid "income-related premium" – Under this policy, employers would pay a tax equal to 6.2 percent of their workers' income. Practically speaking, this - would likely have to take the form of a payroll tax, like the one they are already paying for Social Security and Medicare.

- An increase in income tax rates for high earners – Currently, household income is taxed at 33 percent above $250,000, 35 percent above $413,000, and 39.6 percent above $467,000. Sen. Sanders would tax income at 37 percent above $250,000, 43 percent above $500,000, 48 percent above $2 million, and 52 percent above $10 million.
  - Taxing capital gains and dividends as ordinary income – Currently, long-term capital gains and qualified dividends are taxed at a top rate of 20 percent (plus a 3.8 percent surtax). Sen. Sanders would tax this income the same as earned income for households making above $250,000, resulting in a top rate of 52 percent (plus 10 percent in surtaxes, including the effects of his Social Security plan).
  - Reforming tax expenditure limits – Currently, the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT), personal exemption phaseout (PEP), and Pease limitation are all used to limit the value of various deductions in different ways. Sen. Sanders would replace all of these with a 28 percent limit on the value of itemized deductions, which prevents them from rising in value for those above the 28 percent bracket.
  - Increasing the estate tax – Sanders would increase the top estate tax rate from 40 to 65 percent, lower the threshold for being taxed from $5.45 million to $3.5 million, and close various loopholes.

In addition to these offsets, Sanders estimates significant revenue would be generated by the fact that nearly all health-related tax preferences – most significantly the exclusion for employer-provided health insurance – would become obsolete.

The Budgetary Effect of Sen. Sanders's Single-Payer Health Plan<sup>1</sup>

An analysis by UMass-Amherst economics professor Gerald Friedman estimates that the single-payer system would cost $13.8 trillion over the next ten years and that the seven tax increases Sen. Sanders proposes would raise $13.9 trillion, thus making the system fully paid for. However, these estimates may understate the cost and overstate the revenue raised. Even taking the cost of the single-payer system (and automatic savings to the tax code) as a given, we estimate – roughly, based on Congressional Budget Office/Joint Committee on Taxation methodology – that the proposed offsets would fall short by at least $3 trillion over a decade. If one were also to account for the negative macrodynamic effects that such high marginal rates on income and capital would have, even less revenue would be raised.

As we explained recently, Sen. Sanders may also be understating the cost of his plan – by more than $1 trillion per year, according to health expert Kenneth Thorpe. If Thorpe's analysis is correct, Sen. Sanders's plan (revenue included) could end up costing as much as $14 trillion more than he estimates over a decade before interest or economic impact

With regards to the offsets, a number of the revenue estimates provided by the campaign, in particular, appear to be much higher than what an official score would suggest. For example, the campaign estimates that the 6.2 percent payroll tax and 2.2 percent income surtax combined would generate $8.4 trillion over ten years. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO), however, estimates that a 1 percentage-point payroll tax increase would raise $800 billion over ten years and a 1 percentage-point income tax increase would raise less than . . . $700 billion over ten years – which translates Sen. Sanders's increases to less than $7 trillion total over ten years.

As another example, the Sanders campaign estimates that taxing capital gains and dividends as ordinary income (now with a top rate of 52 percent) would raise $920 billion. Yet most estimators, importantly including the Joint Committee on Taxation, believe the revenue-maximizing rate for capital gains (excluding the dynamic economic effect) is somewhere around 30 percent , since as the capital gains rate rises further, investors choose to "realize" fewer gains by selling assets. With a top capital gains rate of about 62 percent in total (52 percent from taxing gains as ordinary income, 3.8 percent from the Medicare investment surtax, and 6.2 percent from Sen. Sanders's Social Security plan ), the revenue loss from lower capital gains tax collection would likely outweigh the gains from a higher dividends rate. Rather than charge this revenue loss, we give the campaign the benefit of the doubt and simply assume zero additional revenue collection.

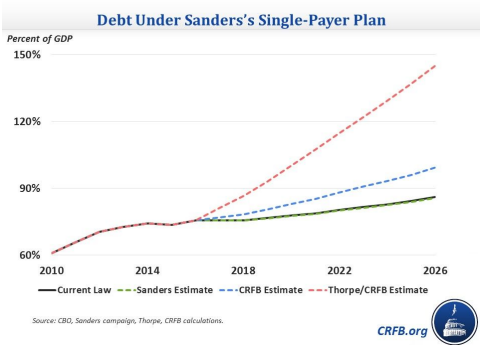

Furthermore, the campaign estimates that replacing the AMT, PEP, and Pease with a 28 percent limit on deductions would raise $150 billion over ten years, but in reality it would likely lose around $250 billion. Replacing Pease alone with the 28 percent limitation would raise $150 billion , but repealing PEP and the AMT would result in significant costs that would more than consume the savings from replacing Pease.

Finally, our best estimate of Sen. Sanders's proposed income tax rate increases – based on IRS tax tables and rules of thumb from CBO – suggest it would raise about $750 billion over ten years rather than $1.1 trillion.

We take Sen. Sanders's estimate that the end of private insurance would lead to automatic tax expenditure savings of $3.1 trillion as a given, although this too might be an overestimate.

Overall, based on our rough estimates and excluding most potential interactions, it appears that Sen. Sanders's proposal would raise $10.7 trillion of revenue.<sup>2</sup> Depending on whether one uses Sen. Sanders's estimates of the cost of his single-payer plan or Thorpe's estimates , this means his plan would cost between $3 trillion and $14 trillion, net of offsets, over a decade.

These costs could have a substantial effect on debt. Currently, CBO projects debt will grow to 86 percent of Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in 2026, and based on the Sanders campaign's estimates it would grow to roughly the same place. But based on our analysis, the shortage of offsets would actually cause debt to grow 13 percentage points higher; adding Thorpe's cost estimate, debt would grow nearly 60 percentage points higher. In other words, under Sen. Sanders's plan, debt could ultimately reach between 100 and 150 percent of GDP by 2026.

The Limits of Taxing High Earners

Even our estimates of the Sanders plan are likely overly optimistic as they do not account for economic effects or any additional behavioral effects beyond those from a small tax increase. While small tax increases are likely to have little economic impact, economists almost universally believe that exorbitantly high taxes will slow economic growth and at some point actually lead to a reduction in revenue.

Although there is considerable disagreement over the exact revenue-maximizing tax rate for ordinary income (the top of the Laffer curve), many economists believe it to be in the range of 60 or 70 percent. Economists Peter Diamond and Emmanuel Saez – supporters of significantly increasing the top tax rate – estimate a revenue maximizing rate of 73 percent in total. When combined with his other proposals, the Sanders plan would lead to a top rate well above that.

Sen. Sanders's single-payer plan proposes a top income tax rate of 52 percent along with 8.4 percent of income-based premiums. Add this to the current 3.8 percent Medicare rate, Sen. Sanders's proposed 0.2 percent payroll tax for paid family leave, and Sen. Sanders's proposed 12.4 percent tax increase for Social Security (from eliminating the cap on income subject to the Social Security tax) and it leads to a top federal rate of about 77 percent. When state and local taxes are included, the top rate rises to an average of about 85 percent – far above the revenue-maximizing level.<sup>3</sup>

While it might be appropriate to exclude economic effects when estimating relatively modest tax changes, tax increases of the magnitude proposed by Sen. Sanders – leading to a rate likely well above the revenue-maximizing rate – would almost certainly raise far less revenue than conventional projections suggest or than we estimated above. The same is true, perhaps more so, for Sen. Sanders's proposed top capital gains rate of 62 percent (about twice the revenue-maximizing level and the highest in history and in the developed world). These policies would also lead to lower GDP and therefore a higher debt-to-GDP ratio.

The bottom line is that while significant revenue can be generated from high earners, there are limits. And at least when it comes to rate changes, the Sanders plan appears to blow past them.

Sen. Sanders has shown a commitment to paying for the cost of his single-payer plan, but the numbers at the moment don't appear to add up. We look forward to hearing more details about the health care side of the plan and hope that he will adjust his policies so that the plan doesn't add to the deficit.
